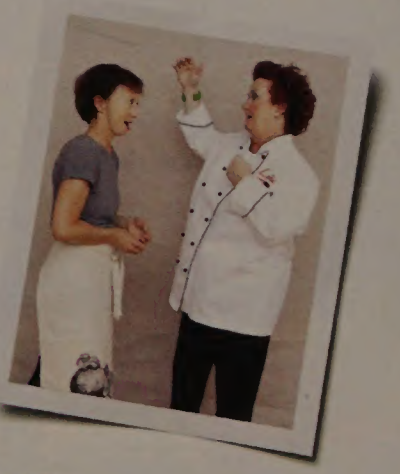
Sure Beats Soylent Green



The most complicated recipe I ever attempted was an egg soufflé drawn from an ancient Roman cookbook. It involved blanched asparagus, a teaspoon of asafoetida (a resinous powder that smells like a donkey's fever sweats) and a high probability of salmonella. The dish was a success in that it didn't make anyone lurch, screaming, out of his chair, hysterically beating his offended tongue with a mallet. Otherwise it was kind of a wash.

Adam DeTour

A better cook could have made it soar, or at least not ooze out of the serving dish like an outbreak of algal bloom. So despite the existence of Gordon Ramsay's TV shows, chefs are valuable members of society. Without them, we wouldn't have bite-sized miracles like hamachi nigiri with spicy banana-pepper mousse. True, walking into a restaurant and paying $14 for a single mouthful of warm nutrients might seem excessive, but you're not going to experience sobbing, transcendent passion from a Frito. Eating is an animal act. Dining can be angelic.

This issue salutes the men, and especially the women, who stir our stockpots. Linh Tran Brincat's article on the bonds between Boston's female chefs examines a side of the restaurant dynamic that's sometimes overlooked by a society enthralled by testes and pig tattoos. A woman's place, she finds, can be in the kitchen.

Blades of Glory

MAN OF STEEL

WHEN ADAM SIMHA took his first knife-making class at MassArt, the professor warned him that the craft could become addictive. Twelve years later, he's grinding custom blades for lauded chefs across the country—including local stars Michael Scelfo, Ana Sortun and Jason Bond—through MKS Design (named for his wife's initials). He's fashioned knife handles out of everything from wood to fiberglass and even corncobs. Perhaps the most unique is his collection of cutlery affixed to bike handles. "Here's a grip that's been refined over how many years to give you control, impact resistance and durability, and it's really easy to customize at the point of assembly," Simha says. "You can't go into a store and say 'I really like this knife, but I wish it was just a little more handle heavy.' And also it's just a whole lot more fun."

Clambake Chemistry

CLAMBAKE-STYLE L.A. STREET CORN
$7 at JM Curley, 21 Temple Place, Boston
(617-338-5333) jmcurleyboston.com

Executive chef Samuel Monsour took more than a month to perfect JM Curley's standout summer dish. It was time well spent. Blending a Mexican recipe with a New England flavor profile, Monsour and his crew created "clambake-style L.A. street corn," a spin on a dish traditionally topped with mayo, cheese and chili powder. House-made mayo is here infused with the flavor of local clams, but the real chemistry is in a linguica powder. Instead of cheese, Monsour mixes bacon fat and linguica spices with tapioca maltodextrin to make a delicious dusting atop the grilled husks. The smoky seasoning combines with the taste of the ocean, and it all comes together with a simple squeeze of lime. BRIGID WRIGHT

Million-Dollar BB

Like skinny jeans, feather extensions and Carly Rae Jepsen, some things go from nowhere to everywhere without anyone really knowing why. In the beauty world, the latest mystery product to become a must-have is BB cream (sometimes standing for "Beauty Balm" or "Blemish Balm"). Skincare consultant and owner of Beauty Muse Bridal, Dana Chasen Thomases offers information and tips on the creams that are currently flooding the market.

Summary: Somewhere between primer and foundation, BB creams are multitasking treatments for light coverage, anti-aging and skin brightening.

History: BB creams were first developed in Germany in the 1960s as skincare treatments, and were repopularized in Korea by actresses who used them after laser treatments. Cosmetics companies, increasingly taking cues from the Asian market, brought them to the U.S.

Ingredients to Look For: SPF (in the form of zinc oxide or titanium dioxide), antioxidants (like Vitamin C), skin brighteners (kojic acid or arbutin, both plant-based, are good alternatives to the harsher hydroquinone).

Keep in Mind: To benefit fully, apply a liberal amount. "And read the label closely," Thomases says. "There's lots of marketing going on."

Parting Words From an Anonymous Skincare Saleswoman: "BB creams are dressed-up tinted moisturizers. Treat them as cosmetics, and don't choose one that promises to adjust itself to your skin tone."

GROWTH SPURT

Much more from Max & Dylan

THE LEGENDARY Restaurant Group plans to open another Max & Dylans next month in Billerica. Or is it Bedford, or maybe Burlington? Actually, the building is sited on property that touches them all, so "we pay taxes to three different towns," says partner Chris Damian, who prefers to stake the restaurant's claim in Bedford. Along with M&D's comfort food lineup, the new venue, in the old Pedro's Fine Latin Cuisine space, will feature more steak-driven items directed at business clientele. Come September, Damian and partner Brad Dalbeck plan to open the Burger Dive at the new Somerville Assembly Row project, and next year they'll unveil a second Papagayo at the same address. If this rate of expansion continues, you, too, may soon have Max and Dylan as neighbors in your neck of the woods.

SPEAKING OF BURGERS, Tremont 647's Andy Husbands has again joined forces with culinary partner Chris Hart and food writer Andrea Pyenson. In a natural follow-up to their cookbook, Wicked Good Barbecue, comes Wicked Good Burgers. Along with a plethora of patty variations (pastrami burger, anyone?), the collection will feature recipes for buns, condiments and veggie options.

Soulfire in Allston has a sibling: a smaller Soulfire in Mission Hill, in the former Brigham Circle Diner space. Owner Wyeth Lynch says the cozy BBQ spot is less than a third of the size of the original, with 20 seats, plus eight counter stools. The menu's the same, but the food is prepared on "some really cool new equipment," says Wyeth. Case in point: a pressure fryer that can cook up to eight orders of fried chicken in just 14 minutes.

A CELEBRATION OF BELGIAN BEER

Best of Belgium

Belgium is renowned for its vibrant and diverse beer culture. A rich tradition of culinary invention and improvisation, combined with centuries of brewing passion and expertise, helped craft a stunning variety of beer styles enjoyed around the world.

Leffe Blonde was first brewed in 1240 by the monks of Abbaye de Notre Dame de Leffe in Belgium. A spicy, faintly clove-like aroma is balanced by Leffe's creamy body and restrained dry finish.

Stella Artois' rich brewing heritage dates back to 1366 in Leuven, Belgium, where it was first brewed to celebrate the holiday season. Traditional malted barley and the highest quality European hops give Stella Artois its full flavor and delicately crisp finish.

Hoegaarden is the Original Belgian Wheat Beer, dating back to the 15th Century. A naturally cloudy beer, Hoegaarden features a secret to its refreshing flavor and spicy nose: real Curaçao orange peel and a dash of coriander.

Always Enjoy Responsibly.

First Taste

VINTAGE STORE

When Chris Damian and Brad Dalbeck opened Max and Dylans in 2008, they tapped into a Downtown Crossing market that had largely been underserved. The neighborhood—now backed by Millennium Partners' promise to build luxury condos to fill the crater left by the Filene's Basement demolition—has undergone a revamp in the last four years, and the duo's Legendary Restaurant Group hopes to find fresh success with Sip Wine Bar and Kitchen, opening in late July in the former Bina Osteria space. "I know this neighborhood," says Damian. "And I know what people here want. This restaurant is for everyone, we're not locking into a specific style of food."

WE'RE NOT LOCKING INTO A SPECIFIC STYLE.

Here, food is a glitzy accessory to the drinks. The diverse menu of culture-hopping small plates, including options like sashimi bowls and arancini, is designed to pair with the 150-bottle wine list—many available by the glass, guzzle or mere mouthful. Patrons in search of pre- or post-theater dinner can order larger, shared plates.

Fans of Bina will remember its adjacent specialty foods store, the Alimentari, which offered high-end Italian fare. Damian and Dalbeck's interpretation is Avery Provision Co., a well-stocked space that, while offering cold cuts, dried pastas and frozen entrees, is most focused on prepared dishes like freshly made sushi. "There's not really a grocery store down here," says Damian. "I envisioned this as the kind of place you can grab dinner, pick up a few things. It's what you make it." KYLE WRIGHT

Q&A

SEASONED VETERAN

Lauded chef Marcus Samuelsson signs copies of his memoir, Yes, Chef, at Whole Foods Market River Street and cooks with chefs Ken Oringer and Jamie Bissonnette at Coppa on July 30.

What's more invasive: writing a memoir or being on reality TV?
I actually suggest that every person, whether they are going to publish it or not, write a memoir because you learn so much about yourself. You really say, "Wow, I should've seen this one coming," and it's OK to go through it and to talk about it, but when you write, it just frames it in a different way.

How have your life experiences influenced the way you cook?
It's everything. Me learning about myself as an Ethiopian man, finding my father and my family in Ethiopia changed how I cook, and it's why we have berbere and other ethnic dishes on the menu. Learning how to make Swedish meatballs from my grandmother, it's why we have these dishes at the Red Rooster. My menu today is a blend of what I learned in those grueling kitchens in France, what my grandmother taught me and living here in Harlem.

What distinguishes a good restaurant from a great one?
Point of view and authorship.

What can diners expect at Coppa?
I love working with Ken. Maybe some Ethiopian dishes. You know, Boston is such a great food town. I'd be lucky to cook with Jody Adams, and I've known Ming [Tsai] for a long time.

Is Boston always trying to catch up to New York with food trends?
Boston reminds me a lot of the city where I come from, Gothenburg, and Gothenburg had that relationship with Stockholm. Boston and New York work together. It's an incredible food town with a diverse community and scene, and you see chefs coming from Boston all the time. They're making a huge footprint.

Why is fashion important to you?
So much about cooking is about having a style and a point of view, so for me, it's not fashion related. It's style related. You work hard, you want your food to look great, taste great, and you want to look right in front of your staff. I dress with where I've been. I've lived in France, I'm Ethiopian, and I live in Harlem. Those places have very specific and unique styles. Maybe I'll mix an Ethiopian scarf with some Swedish Acne jeans and maybe a vintage Yves Saint Laurent tie. I'd rock all of that.

In a recent review, Eddie Huang accused you of promoting gentrification in Harlem. What do you say to that?
I trust the work of Red Rooster. It's not about what some person thinks, it's about the people that work there. Before, there was nothing there, and now we're hiring 110 people, and 75 of them are from Harlem. Every day, 600 people come to Red Rooster and spend money in Harlem. Everyone is free to have their own opinion, but the real critics are the people who come to the restaurant and support it. KYLE WRIGHT

MARKET PRICE

Greg Reeves
CHEF AT GREEN ST. GRILL

SAVE: "You can spend a lot of money on Teflon pans or a little money on Teflon pans, and they do the same thing. You can get one for 70 bucks or you can get one for seven bucks at Target. You might as well get three."

SPLURGE: "A sharpening stone, because you can spend as much money as you want on a knife, but if it's not sharp it isn't worth s. If you're going to buy a knife, you might as well spend money on equipment that will take care of the knife."

Jeffrey Fournier
CHEF/OWNER AT 51 LINCOLN

SAVE: "When making your own pasta, instead of getting an extruder, buy a pasta roller. You can get these online for $25. That's a cheap way you could make your own fresh pasta and not be paying $8 a package."

SPLURGE: "I'm a butcher, so handmade Japanese-style high-carbon steel knives, because the quality of the workmanship and the quality of the cuts that the knife will make are very important."

William Romiza
PASTRY CHEF AT MERITAGE

SAVE: "You don't really need expensive molds or tart pans, you can get the same result with baking cups or muffin tins. You can take paper and make it into a cone or a cylinder. With a little creativity, you can find many things in your kitchen that could be turned into molds."

SPLURGE: "The most useful item would be a quality food processor. There're so many things you can do with it, like make pie crusts or puree fruit for filling. You can also make sauces and more. They're time-saving and versatile."

Drink of the Moment

HEROIC COUPLET

NAMES: Crouching Tiger and Hidden Dragon.

PRICE: $44, each.

CROUCHING TIGER AND HIDDEN DRAGON
Empire Asian Restaurant & Lounge, 1 Marina Park Drive, Boston (617-295-0001) empireboston.com

SPIRITUAL COUSIN: "It's like ordering a big bottle of champagne," says O'Connor. "Everyone wants to be seen."

INGREDIENTS: Crouching Tiger: Stoli Blueberi, Bacardi Select 151, pineapple juice, sour mix; Hidden Dragon: Stoli Razberi, Stoli Ohranj, Captain Morgan Black, orange juice, pineapple juice, cherries.

INVENTOR: Bar and beverage director at Big Night Entertainment Group Joe O'Connor.

FLAVOR: Crouching Tiger is related to the Mai Tai, with the sweet citrus of the pineapple cut by a trace of blueberry. Hidden Dragon delivers a bold cherry and orange punch leavened with spice from the rum.

APPEARANCE: Festive, celebratory. Above all, enormous.

POPULARITY: The Dragon outsells the Tiger.

DESPITE THE VODKA BASE: At Empire, says O'Connor, "Everything's driven from Asian liquor. Yamazaki whiskey, sake. And we like throwing stuff together that you wouldn't expect." Hence the float of Bacardi 151 on Crouching Tiger, giving it extra bite.

KICK: Deft, even acrobatic. May induce sensations of slow-motion, or the need for subtitles.

GROUND IT WITH: Solid ballast like the Singapore street noodles with Madras curry or steamed buns filled with shiitake mushrooms.

MEA CULPA

TO THE FAMILY CROSSING BEACON STREET ON JULY 10 AROUND 8 PM: You were right in calling me a b*. I'm an idiot. I was in the wrong, and I'm glad no one got hurt as I careened my bike too close to your baby in the stroller. I'm so sorry to have scared you. I scared myself and turned around to find you to personally apologize. I'm sure you were glad to be rid of me. I'll be very careful biking from here on out. I'm terribly sorry.

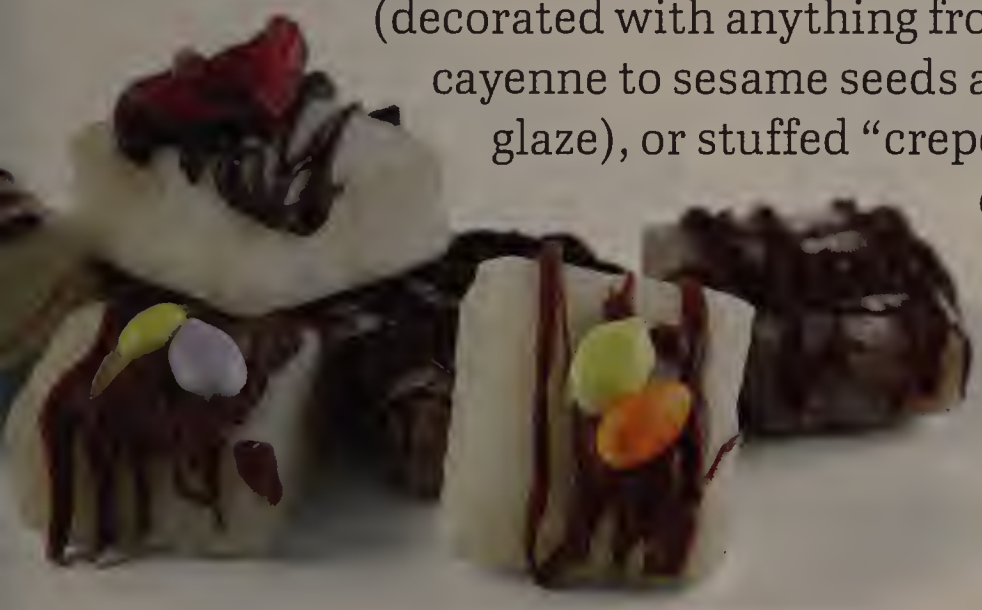
A caring cyclist

To the Impersonals editor:

You embellished substantially on my rant about overweight and obese people wearing formfitting clothes. Flab? Muffin tops? I was expressing a kinder complaint!

Grossed out

To the woman on the Commuter Rail to Worcester at 7 am:



Nobody was happy to be on this 7 am train to begin with. We all shuffled on with coffees in hands, stared blankly at the maroon leather seats in front of us and waited to pay our newly hiked fare like the good, silent commuters we are. We all thought this train ride was ours for conking out against the windows and open-mouth sleeping all the way to the suburbs. And then you came along (jewel-encrusted iPhone in hand) and ruined it. It seems you had to discuss your recent breakup on the phone in a voice loud enough to have fared in the breakup fight itself—a voice that rendered any and all naps impossible. I have a feeling that incessantly repeating "Well, there's nothing I can do about it now, right?" didn't make you feel any better. It certainly didn't do anything for the rest of us.

Show Me the Mochi

You may think you know mochi, those chewy rice cubes eaten with fro-yo, or the ice cream–filled confections found in supermarket freezer cases. But in Somerville, Erino Wade produces the real deal from scratch in her home kitchen. Available as spheres (plain or filled with red-bean paste), slabs (decorated with anything from chocolate and cayenne to sesame seeds and salty-sweet soy glaze), or stuffed "crepes," the sweet rice–based dough is firm but tender. Even if you've never tried mochi, it'll ruin you for the commercially made variety. ELIZABETH BOMZE

SPENSER EVERLASTING

Boston's most famous detective is on another case.

SPENSER, BLESSEDLY resurrected by crime writer Ace Atkins, is alive and in print with a new novel, complete with Robert B. Parker's name, big as a blimp, hovering over the title. In this installment, Spenser is hired by Mattie, a tough, angry 14-year-old whose addict mother was murdered four years before in South Boston. Mattie fervently believes that the man jailed for the killing is innocent, so she seeks Spenser's help in searching out the real culprit.

The unlikely duo roams through Thugsville, bonded by the fact that Spenser, too, grew up motherless. Rough language is another connection, with Atkins mirroring Parker's trademark repartee—witty one-liners that twinkle with a light irony. Spenser's attitude meshes with his old sidekick, Hawk, whose language wonderfully mixes rocky grammar with a kind of terse, existential poetry.

Lullaby
by Ace Atkins

Atkins continues the late Robert B. Parker's "Spenser" series of mysteries.

Candidates for the role of murderer are numerous, and a tone of sulky guilt pervades their stories even as they paint an unflattering portrait of Mattie's mother.

Spenser's famous, fluidly dancing relationship with Susan, a psychologist, is further developed with her giving sage, off-the-cuff therapy to the troubled girl. It all wraps up when Mattie's grit is dramatically displayed in a wild scene in the subway. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 129: "Yeah," Mattie said. "All you do is go around and ask questions. Bother people till they give you answers. I figure I could do the same thing. You basically act like an asshole and don't let people lie."

Susan grinned. "The young lady makes an excellent point."

"Sometimes I have to shoot people."

"I could do that," Mattie said. She sipped her milkshake. Her pink ball cap was slightly askew. Her winter coat had been buttoned all wrong.

I looked to Susan. Susan watched Mattie.

"Shooting people is not the highlight of my work," I said.

DESERT FLOWER

Salt Lake City is an oasis of culture and cuisine.

VALLEY HO! The Grand America, the Leonardo and City Creek Center are Salt Lake City landmarks.

THANKS TO AN INFLUX OF energetic, forward-thinking hipsters, Utah's Salt Lake City—famous for hosting the 2002 Winter Olympics and headquartering the Mormon religion—has become a magnet for visitors looking for outdoor fun in a stunning natural setting. Funky neighborhoods, fine dining and charming watering holes liven up the scene, which in the warmer months hums with a different, but equally vibrant, excitement than during ski season.

A convenient base is the Grand America Hotel, a Five Diamond retreat only 10 minutes from Salt Lake City International Airport yet within easy walking distance to many of the big attractions. Reminiscent of an inflated Italian villa, the hotel sports landscaped parterre gardens, a secluded outdoor pool, fitness center and plush rooms with English wool carpets, Italian marble bathrooms and views overlooking the Wasatch and Oquirrh mountain ranges. On premise are several outstanding shops, including an enchanting toy store and a Parisian pastry shop filled with scrumptious fruit tarts, macarons and tortes.

Traveler's Checks

The Grand America Hotel offers live jazz every Friday and Saturday night in the Lobby Lounge from 6–9 pm.

TRAX is the above-ground rail system that provides an easy way to get around downtown. For more info, see rideuta.com.

Because Salt Lake City sits in a valley, days tend to be hot and dry while nights are cool, so pack accordingly.

To jump start your relaxation, begin your escape in the hotel's Grand Spa for a hot stone massage, or find liquid relief in the Lobby Lounge with a taste of local High West whiskey (yes, there are distilleries in Mormon country). You can savor an elegant dinner at the hotel's Garden Café, but options abound. Like many cities, Utah's capital has hopped on the locavore bandwagon, now exhibited in spots like Pago, Forage Restaurant and the Farm at Canyons. Executive chef Nathan Powers, a culinary transplant from Bambara Restaurant & Bar in Cambridge, now runs Bambara Restaurant in Salt Lake City, an edgy, modern American bistro awash in black and white and housed in the former lobby of the 1924 Continental Bank. In addition to an inspired corn bisque with Jonah crab, he prepares full-throttle meat dishes, like bacon-wrapped pork tenderloin and balsamic-glazed pork ribs with seared escarole, cheddar chili grits and garlic chimichurri. Another happening place is the downtown Squatters Pubs & Beers, where you'll find more varieties of house-crafted ales, lagers and stouts than you can safely guzzle. Order a tasting flight to get a feel for your favorites, then round it out with refined pub fare like an ahi tuna spring roll salad.

During the day, hit the verdant slopes at Snowbird or Solitude Mountain Resort for summer concerts, wildflower festivals and more energetic diversions like horseback riding, mountain biking and disc golf. The Deer Valley Music Festival runs through Aug. 11 at the Snow Park Outdoor Amphitheater, featuring the Utah Symphony joined by artists like Earth Wind & Fire on Aug. 4 and Pink Martini on Aug. 11.

For those looking to add more cerebral stops to their itinerary, visit the new Natural History Museum of Utah, a sleek, copper-clad building whose golden-red shimmer melts into the backdrop of the nearby hills. Highlights of the collection include the native nations of Utah exhibit and a jaw-dropping collection of dinosaurs reconstructed from real bones. Also worth visiting is the Leonardo in Library Square, a science, tech and art museum filled with exhibits on subjects like the cultural, spiritual significance of water and a show that examines creative texts to explore the fabricated history of the 20th century.

Of course, the biggest attraction is Temple Square, home to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints with its six spires and domed Tabernacle. As the focal point of a religion for 14 million people, it's an eye-opening spectacle. Nearby, the new City Creek Center, provides a shopper's paradise with more than 90 stores tucked along a landscaped pedestrian walkway. Along with familiar brands like Michael Kors, travelers can find unique gifts at local shops like Utah Woolen Mills.

Salt Lake City is laid out on a simple grid, so it's easy to wander. Exploring the streets, you can't help but feel a catchy, high-voltage rush fueled by bike warriors, musicians, chefs, artists and outdoor adventurers who make this oasis in the desert a fabulous place to explore, relax and recharge. ×××

ON THE QUAD Sea scallops on corn puree with house-cured bacon vinaigrette

THE GRAFTON GROUP, owners of Temple Bar, Grafton Street and Russell House Tavern, has long made Cambridge its stronghold. With its newest venture, Park, it secures its crown as hospitality king of Harvard Square. Having reinvented the former Redline space with an eye for both comfort and charm, the vision is rounded out by the considerable talents of executive chef Mark Goldberg.

At Park, you can choose a space to suit your mood. There's the main dining room, with its 30-seat horseshoe bar of dark oak; the clubby den, with leather chairs, exposed brick and a curio cabinet of artifacts of an earlier era; or "the classroom," with intimacy created by a flickering fireplace and historic maps of Harvard Square hanging on the walls.

For an ideal sampling of what's on offer, grab a barstool and order the patty melt ($9), a perfectly seared, rare and juicy burger served on organic rye with melted American cheese and sautéed Cholula onions. The melt came with a mountain of hot, fresh French fries, perfect for washing down with headliners from the 50-label beer menu. A 16 oz. can of the high-octane Sierra Nevada Torpedo Extra IPA ($7), or a 22 oz. bottle of Lagunitas Wilco Tango Foxtrot, aka "WTF," strong ale ($14), are two personal favorites. Park's more than respectable wine list sported almost 30 choices, including Two Oceans sauvignon blanc ($26) from South Africa, featuring characteristic citric freshness, and Tintonegro malbec ($26) from Argentina, which meshed adeptly with the more robust entrees.

Of Park's 10 starters, I scarfed down six. New England clam chowder ($6) packed intense flavor with a rich clam broth stippled with bacon. A smoky, salty plate of crispy pork belly ($10) was punched up with the bite of acidic pickled oranges and bitter collard greens. Mussels ($8) received the deep-fried, clam shack treatment for a happy result, as the fresh, crunchy morsels mingled with fragments of preserved lemon. Spice-roasted cauliflower ($9) combined the vegetable's al dente texture with creamy feta cheese and rum-soaked raisins. Duck leg ($11) had a crackling skin atop tender meat matched with a lively blackberry glaze. But rivaling the chowder for top honors was the salt-and-pepper shrimp ($10) complemented by cilantro, spiced with pickled jalapeño and cooled with a Napa cabbage slaw.

The appetizers set the bar at an admirably high level, and the mains breezed over the mark. Four jumbo sea scallops ($23) were seared to build their natural sweetness. A garnish of shaved asparagus, corn puree and bacon vinaigrette distinguished the dish as more than just another scallop entree. Roasted half chicken ($18) harmonized with zucchini, red and yellow cherry tomatoes, onions, cucumbers and hefty croutons, great for mopping up the toothsome gravy. In contrast, while the much praised "meat pie of the day" ($15) looked grand, the beef-and-burgundy interior failed to match up to the flaky golden crust. Robust meat flavors dominated in both the grilled lamb belly ($19), with layers of luscious fat intensifying its richness—and slow-roasted beef brisket ($17), soft and juicy, paired with a white bean cassoulet studded with—what else?—bacon. (One can even begin a meal with a trio of toasts unfortunately named the "bacon 3-way.")

Chocolate terrine

For dessert, choices included seasonal fruit pie, regional cheese or triple-chocolate terrine. With layers of hazelnuts, cherry compote and chocolate cake, the terrine ($7) had the range to bring any visit to a sweet, satiating close.

The Grafton Group has found a casual, profitable, comfort-food comfort zone, with each new project building on the success of the last. While I'd like to taste what would happen should they eventually break from their pattern, Park proves that the current formula produces undeniably delicious results. ✖✖✖

Q: I AM RELATIVELY FIT AND I WATCH WHAT I EAT, BUT I STILL HAVE A MUFFIN TOP. I WANT TO BE ABLE TO WEAR MY SWIM SUIT WITH CONFIDENCE. ANY QUICK FIXES?

A: Yes, there is a solution: ultrasonic body contouring. This body contouring treatment is ideally suited for people who have love handles, muffin tops, or unwanted fat in the waist and abdomen.

Ultrasonic body contouring is non-invasive, doesn't hurt (in fact it feels good!), and you see results quickly.

It works by using sound waves to stimulate fat cells, increasing the cells' permeability, which allows stored fat to escape. The fat cells release extra stored fat, which is then used by our body for fuel. The fat cells shrink back to a normal size and you are now slimmer.

This is a great treatment for men and women. Ultrasonic body contouring also works for thighs, knees, and upper arms. The treatment is extremely safe, there is no recovery or downtime, and no known side-effects.

Several sessions are required for the best results, but at SkinHealth, we typically see results even after the first treatment. Treatments can be done as often as every two days, so we can have you looking your best in a swim suit in a very short period of time!

GIMME SHELTER

Home is where the heart breaks.

Oslo, August 31st ★★★★
Starring Anders Danielsen Lie, Malin Crépin, Hans Olav Brenner, Ingrid Olava and Kjersti Odden Skjeldal. Based on the novel Le Feu Follet by Pierre Drieu La Rochelle. Screenplay by Eskil Vogt and Joachim Trier. Directed by Joachim Trier. At Kendall Square Cinema.

ONE DAY AT A TIME. That's what they say in recovery.

Some days are longer than others, and Joachim Trier's haunting Oslo, August 31st spends 24 hours in the slippery skin of Anders (Anders Danielsen Lie), a 34-year-old heroin addict on a pass from an in-patient rehab program. He's returned to his hometown in the Norwegian capital for the first time in almost a year. Ostensibly, he's back for a job interview, but mostly he's surveying the damage done after a wasted life.

Trier's debut film, Reprise, (which also starred Danielsen Lie) remains one of this past decade's undiscovered gems. That exuberant blast of filmmaking pitted two friends and aspiring writers in a constant competition in which greatness leads to madness, and mediocrity offers its own rewards. A messy sprawl heavily indebted to the French New Wave, Reprise photographed its young, hard-partying hyper-intellectuals like rock stars. The movie made erudition sexy, and more than a little intoxicating.

So consider Oslo, August 31st as the hangover. Reprise's brash, 20-something exuberance has here been replaced with the chill moods of the mid-30s. The camera no longer careens. Instead, it's locked into carefully arranged compositions suffused with harsh Scandinavian sunlight. The pace is deliberate, prone to long silences and overheard murmurs of conversation. Much like its protagonist, Oslo goes nowhere in a hurry.

> That's the trouble with Anders. Everybody gave up on him years ago, assuming he'd turn up dead sooner or later.

Loosely based on Pierre Drieu La Rochelle's 1931 novel, Le Feu Follet, the movie patiently follows Anders as he drifts through his hometown attempting to reconnect with old friends and take measure of a world that has moved on while he was lost in a druggy fog. His meetings are often short and freighted with feelings better left unsaid.

The first stop finds Anders with an old party buddy (Hans Olav Brenner) who has uncomfortably drifted into suburban fatherhood. The way this guy guzzles beer at lunchtime suggests he's not quite as settled down as he'd like to pretend, and askance glares from the missus drag down the cordial conversation, linking the exchange to a past we're left only to imagine.

That's the trouble with Anders. Everybody gave up on him years ago, assuming he'd turn up dead sooner or later. His parents have to sell the family house to cover his frightening debts, and his own sister can't even bear to have a meal with him. She instead fakes some work nonsense and sends her brusque girlfriend to make excuses. Anders has been counted out for so long that his sudden reappearance becomes more of an inconvenience than a welcome reunion. Nobody wants to make much of an effort because he's probably just going to let them all down again.

So why even bother? That's the awful, existential question posed by Oslo, August 31st. Anders moves through the picture like a ghost, and Danielsen Lie's performance grows increasingly closed off and enigmatic. As a smart guy from a good family who just can't help destroying himself, Anders deliberately tanks the job interview and starts putting himself into dangerous situations, perhaps more out of habit than anything else. Trier keeps the camera in front of Anders with a tight telephoto lens, allowing him to drift in and out of focus.

There's an ex-girlfriend in New York who won't return his phone calls, and there's an awkward moment with one of her former suitors to whom Anders offers forgiveness. (That doesn't go so well.) Knocking about with old cronies, he finds the tenor of the parties has changed. Everyone's fading slowly and sadly into middle age, and a female pal pointedly laments her friends "who have vanished into motherhood." There's no place left for him anymore.

Oslo, August 31st is a devastating film, and when Anders eavesdrops on conversations at a local coffee shop, I was reminded of the angels in Wim Wenders' Wings of Desire. Like Anders, they're desperately longing to be part of a community that remains slightly, tantalizingly out of reach. ✖✖✖

COMING TOGETHER

Brandi Carlile dashes boundaries with a country-tinged mixture.

Brandi Carlile
plays at Bank of America Pavilion on Aug. 4.

BRANDI CARLILE HAS steadily built her Boston audience performing everywhere from small halls to festivals like Newport Folk and Life Is Good, where large crowds discovered her soulful country-rock charms. She's currently building a bigger audience around the country, hitting spots as far away as Alaska.

"When I started touring, I took valuable advice from the Indigo Girls, who told me the most important thing I could do in my career was to just keep returning to the same places," Carlile says. "No matter the state of the industry or the economy, it's still about people coming together to hear and play live music."

Like the Indigo Girls, Carlile delivers onstage as a passionate singer/songwriter who has engaged mainstream fans both before and since she came out publicly a few years back—with nary a blip on the radar. "Just living your life openly and honestly is actually enough in these times," says Carlile, who addresses broad social causes through her Looking Out Foundation. "That's the gift that we've been given by people who paved the way."

> "Just living your life openly and honestly is actually enough in these times."

The music that initially inspired the Washington State native was country, played around the house by her parents who took her to concerts at the county fair. She saw the Judds three times by age 10, and at 12, she won tickets to see Elton John. "Elton John was the gateway drug from country-and-western music," says Carlile (who also fell for Queen's Freddie Mercury). "We always had a reverence for big singers in this family."

Outrageousness was part of the appeal. "I've been drawn to flamboyance from such a young age," the 31-year-old says, "and glamourousness from a very queer and untraditional sense. I'm fascinated with Grand Ole Opry culture, the suits and fringe and cowboy boots… and Elvis Presley and all his jumpsuits and Elton John and his craziness."

For her part, Carlile sticks to a bare-bones performance style anchored by her raw, emotive voice and cross-genre versatility. With her fifth album, Bear Creek, she sounds more comfortable in capturing her own energy and diversity. The album—named after the rural Washington studio where it was recorded—ranges from the thumping hoedown "Raise Hell" to "That Wasn't Me," a pensive song about a family member's alcoholism. "It's a person finding out how to be their best self and expecting everybody else to get on board with it, although it takes time," she says. A more playful tune, the closing track "Just Kids," sports the backing vocals of chirping frogs.

"None of us were in our right mind, and we decided to send the microphone out to the creek," Carlile says of that last song. "The approach to Bear Creek was just random and really fun."

Besides playing guitar, organ and piano on the album, she splits banjo duties with guitarist Tim Hanseroth, who joins his bassist twin brother, Phil, as her equal cowriters and bandmates. That's been the working relationship since Carlile signed with Columbia Records in 2004. "We stuck with [sharing] for a lot of reasons, but the main reason is because when you do it that way, the music always wins."

That's especially true in the studio, as the twins compensate for Carlile's unease. "I get so uncomfortable in the studio with the loss of an audience," she says. "I'll bring my mom in, and just having her listen makes me perform a little better."

It's a different story onstage, where Carlile belts out both her own songs and covers of idols from Patsy Cline to Radiohead. She sang Johnny Cash's "Sunday Morning Coming Down" at a recent show with Josh Ritter, who joins her at Bank of America Pavilion on Aug. 4. (Carlile's band also plays the Cape Cod Melody Tent the night before and Hampton Beach Casino Ballroom the night after.)

She's even been tackling Queen's opus "Bohemian Rhapsody" as an encore. "The middle section with the Italian operatic craziness, I've made like a total, chugging punk-rock section," Carlile says with delight. "It's insanely different every night." ×××

FALLING FOR IT

On the oddities of marriage and divorce

DID YOU EVER THINK about the phrases most people vow when they get married? "For richer or poorer, in sickness and in health." And what about the romantics who wed multiple times? They say the same things all over again. I was the best man for a friend's fourth trip to the altar. He used to come into my office unannounced, just blow by the receptionist and show up. After his third divorce, I said to him, "If you ever think about marrying again you can never come up here again."

He just smiled his little boy smile and launched into a discussion of the six books he was reading simultaneously. Then suddenly he stopped. "You know," he said, "I need to be in love, and it can't be arm's length. I have to be married. And it's not hope over experience. I love to inhale the warmth in the bed after she's gotten up and left."

"I don't think you have to be married to have that sensation," I said.

"You don't understand," he told me.

There are 1,000 ways to the truth. Years ago, I thought I was enough in love to get married. I was 25 years old, and my father thought it was a horrible idea. He told me, "I've arranged for you to have lunch with someone who knows all about this subject, a European." My dad thought that America was such a young country, and Europe represented the true sophisticated, cynical, seasoned approach to this subject of marriage. Back in the days of civilized lunches, this European banker took me to a place that was heavy on formality, service and alcohol. It was the early 1960s. Protests and hippies were barely on the horizon. Businessmen had cocktails for lunch, and we drank gin martinis straight up, very cold. My tongue loosened, and I told the banker about my girlfriend. He wore a fresh flower in his lapel, a bud rose, and his accent was vaguely Viennese.

"I'm on my third wife," he told me, "and I loved them all in different ways." He sipped. "But I know now not to marry young, if you're a man. You have to get established in life, to focus on business, to accumulate a little money. You want to order hamburgers all your life? Everything is stretched out before you; don't tie yourself down. Read Lawrence Durrell's Alexandria Quartet... endless kinds of love, adventures to have. Don't be a stupid American romantic kid."

He said "kid" with a kind of contempt. I didn't marry the woman I was dating, and it was partially because of the sophisticated banker. Durrell was lush and haunting, convincing me that I needed more years of adventures—preferably in Alexandria—before I said any vows or put down roots.

Many people I know have told me that at weddings they secretly wish that when the congregations are asked, "If anyone here objects to this union..." that someone would jump up and object loudly, and even better if they ran up the aisle and carried the bride away like Dustin Hoffman in The Graduate. At the wedding of one of my sisters-in-law, a young man in back was crying so hard that even the minister paused and stared, probably worrying that his ceremony would spiral out of control.

"I was so crazy for Lois," the young man told me later. "Her husband doesn't deserve her." My sister-in-law teared up as well when he came through the receiving line. The what-ifs haunt us all as we look back at our lives.

I mentioned this story to a woman friend who said, "Well, no one popped up at my wedding to my first husband. But we had our reception at my parents' home on Long Island: famous gardens, 350 guests. My father took me for a walk the night before. He stopped at one point, put his hands on my shoulders, and said, 'You don't have to marry this schmuck if you don't want to. I don't care if we send everyone home.'"

The what-ifs haunt us all as we look back at our lives.

This leads me to a moral question about marriage. How many times have friends said to each other something along the lines of, "Charlie's fiancée is totally wrong for him. This will end in tears if they get married. It'll be a disaster. Who's going to tell him?" Of course, no one tells Charlie. A few years later, when the divorce is final, his friends admit how they all felt about the bride. "Why the hell didn't you tell me then?" Charlie asks.

"If we told you then," they say, "you never would've talked to us again."

Another observation, from having attended hundreds of weddings, is that the more elaborate the departure from the ceremony or reception, the less likely the enterprise is to be a success. I've witnessed the bride and groom leaving the crowd in a model T Ford, a choo-choo train, a Maserati, a horse and buggy, a speedboat, on horseback and a bicycle built for two. One of my best friends went to a marquee society wedding at the Plaza in New York. At the close, the couple got into the limo opposite the fountain where Scott and Zelda Fitzgerald cavorted. As the bride and groom settled into the backseat, she looked at her brand new husband and said, "I think I've made a horrible mistake." Cut your losses early is an old Wall Street cliché. This marriage lasted six months.

When I was in high school, my dad told me, "You date a girl, always look at the mother. Because a woman inevitably turns into the mother. You can't stand the mom, be careful, that's who your girlfriend becomes." Dad never factored in a girl's father's genes, but he didn't appreciate a rebuttal to his facts of life.

As I was sitting on a beach recently, thinking about love and relationships, an older woman, pulled by a determined Jack Russell, said hello. She talked to me about missing her husband who had died some years ago. I asked her if she ever thought of remarrying. "God no," she answered. "I wouldn't dream of sharing a bathroom with some old man."

As Mickey and Sylvia sang not so long ago, "Love is strange." ✖✖✖

Tips on how to avoid dying of heatstroke

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

WE'RE INTO THE DOG days of summer. That means that the mercury's rising, if you're using an old thermometer filled with poisonous liquid metal. If you have such an instrument, please don't throw it in the ocean because tunas eat them, and the next thing you know Jeremy Piven has mercury poisoning. Then if a bear eats Jeremy Piven, our whole ecosystem is irreparably damaged. My point is it's hot out.

To find out how hot, turn on the weather report. If today's icon is a smiling sun, the weather will be nice. If it's a smiling sun wearing sunglasses, even better. If it's a grimacing, sweating sun with a gun to its head, that's not good. You need some tips to stay cool, and I'm going to provide them:

▶ One thing you could do is go to a nice, air-conditioned movie theater and buy a ticket for Magic Mike. Even though that movie's been out for a while, and you've already seen it five times, Mom. If your car is air-conditioned, get in and drive 100 miles in whichever direction whimsy takes you. (Except the one facing the unrelenting sun.)

▶ The temperature becomes cooler as altitude increases, so now might be the time to become a weather scientist and live at the top of Mount Washington. Don't know how to fix a pitot-static anemometer or get to Mount Washington? Just climb a ladder. But remember to do so slowly, because altitude sickness is the scourge of us sea-level peoples.

▶ Wet ice or dry ice? One of them you're not supposed to eat, but I can't seem to keep them straight. It's like "psychiatrist" versus "psychologist"—I can never remember to whom I'm supposed to confess my recurring nightmare in which Guy Fieri chases me across the moon while screaming, "Punky Brewster, don't play hide-and-seek near that old refrigerator!"

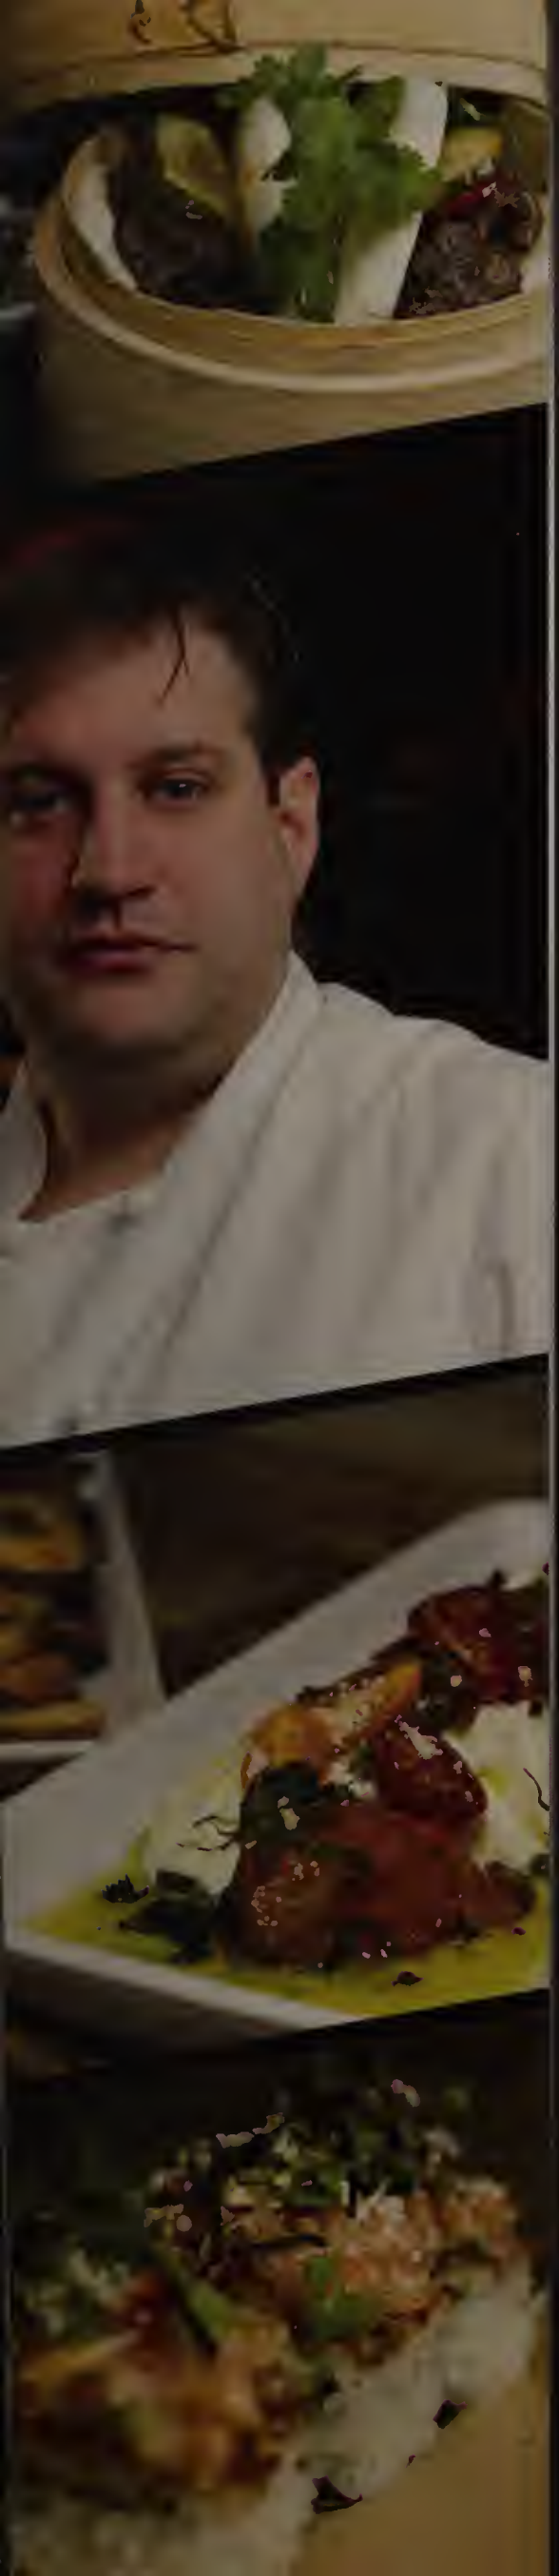
▶ Temperature isn't the only factor in the heat equation. You also need to pay attention to the dew point. The dew point is the point at which it's so hot that you want to drink Mountain Dew. My personal Dew Point is 150 degrees. Celsius.

> If you want to curb the greenhouse effect, you should paint your house some other color.

▶ Try to avoid working outdoors. If you can, work at an indoor job where there's plenty of soothing shade, like down at the steel foundry. If you work in a greenhouse, be aware that even though you're technically indoors, you'll still be very warm due to the greenhouse effect. Also, 95 percent of scientists agree that if you want to curb the greenhouse effect, you should paint your house some other color.

▶ Buy a fan. Turn it to its highest setting. Then get really close to the fan and say, "I am a robot. Humans must die. I am Slaughterbot 2000, and I hate humans." You'll sound like a homicidal robot! That'll be funny and help take your mind off the fact that you're still really hot because fans don't do anything.

▶ Take a swim. The Charles River is a cool and refreshing place to wash away your cares. You won't have to worry about icky fish swimming past and touching your leg because nothing lives in there. Trivia fact: The Charles River is named after River Phoenix. Each fall, his death is commemorated by teams of strong ladies rowing narrow boats to and fro while being yelled at through a megaphone. I learned that on a Duck Boat tour.



▶ Want to be really cool? Go to this new bar, Schmurr. You need to know the password, which they broadcast over CB radio each evening. There's no sign, but you just knock on this one particular manhole cover in the Diddlydinks District. Don't know where that is? I thought you were cool.

▶ OK, you know what's really cool? Saying no to drugs. Psych! Here, try this stuff. Awesome, huh? Psych again! I'm an undercover cop. You're under arrest.

▶ If the temperature has dropped, and you're still too hot, you're just wearing too many clothes. Stop by Centerfolds, and you'll see what I'm talking about. Nobody in there is breaking a sweat, even though the thermostat is turned up so high that you wouldn't want to wear sweatpants even if they'd let you.

▶ Get a big wrench and open a fire hydrant. Then run away, because you've just done something that I'm pretty sure is illegal. Have a neat summer! ✖✖✖

UNRAVELING SOX

Can the season be saved?

THE CURRENT RED SOX team is reminding us of the old days when fans could resign themselves to failure by early August and enjoy the rest of their summer in peace. Last year, the Chicken & Beer Squad had the audacity to suck us in until the last pitch of the regular season. Then they wiped our hopes away, like grease from the fingers of an overpaid pitcher.

The Sox went through an overhaul, but a new GM and a new field manager didn't bring in the wholesale changes we expected. Something stinks over on Yawkey Way, but winning washes away a lot of sin. Success, however, has been sporadic. The team is currently more than nine games out of first place in the AL East. In Boston, that's just not going to cut it.

At times, struggles can make a team endearing. Who doesn't like rooting for the underdog? But personally, I don't remember disliking a Red Sox team as much as this one. Maybe it was the iteration after Roger Clemens left in a huff. Maybe it was when Butch Hobson replaced Joe Morgan. But I think it's this bunch, the one with a pitcher making almost $16 million (Josh Beckett) despite having less than half the wins of a pitcher earning less than $500,000 (Felix Doubront).

While the higher-ups point fingers, they're part of the image problem. That consecutive sellout streak not only doesn't pass the smell test, it's clearly past its expiration date.

The post-championship excitement has cooled off, and fans have made it known that they're not going to buy into expensive, mediocre, disappointing baseball.

The organization's mismanagement of hundreds of millions of dollars has been calamitous. The irony is that spending truckloads of cash is what helped make this franchise one of the most successful in sports. But the Sox used to spend wisely. One need only look at the division rival Baltimore Orioles to see that a willingness to inflate your payroll doesn't guarantee a rise in the standings. The Sox have spent so much on bad talent—often locking these players into long-term contracts—that 2012 feels like just the first year in an extended shedding process.

Yes, injuries have hurt this team, but that can't be used as an excuse. Injuries are simply a part of the game. If anything, teams with big bank accounts should be even better prepared to weather the damage that accrues throughout the season. Plus, pointing to injuries sounds like whining, especially when the Tampa Bay Rays beat you to a pulp, and do it with about $110 million less.

I said at the beginning of the season that the Sox are a playoff team, and despite the warts, I'm sticking to that claim. They still have the everyday talent and starting staff—should the pitchers perform to their abilities—to compete with baseball's best.

Remember, once last season's team MVP, Jacoby Ellsbury, gets back into the swing of things after his stint on the DL, he'll add a huge boost to an already potent lineup. And Dustin Pedroia will be better in the second half, as he recovers from a recurring thumb injury. Pedroia is the heart and soul of this team, and when he's starting at second base everyday, the team gets a spark they desperately need. Then there's David Ortiz, who's been carrying the Red Sox on his giant shoulders. Leading the team in every major batting category, can Big Papi keep this up through October? History says yes.

But I don't want to harp on a few players. This is bigger than that. This is ultimately a numbers game. Unlike the NFL, where every team is on somewhat equal footing, the rules of baseball allow the scales to be skewed toward large-market teams like Chicago, New York and Boston. And despite last season's terrible ending, that was still a team that won 90 games. Another figure to remember is that an extra wild card team will be added to the playoffs this year. A team capable of scrapping together 90 victories has a decent shot at the postseason.

The Red Sox pitching has been problematic, their erraticism buoyed by the unforeseen contributions of Doubront, Franklin Morales—even Dice-K. But if the Big Three—Jon Lester, Josh Beckett and Clay Buchholz—don't start putting it together, our hopes could be sunk. If just two of the aces can stay in the rotation and catalyze a couple of winning streaks, that should be enough to slide the Sox into that final playoff spot.

It hasn't been pretty, and the path in the second half will be even steeper than the first. But like them or not—think of them as deserving or not—the reality is that the Red Sox are a playoff team, and once you're in the playoffs, anything's possible. And winning changes everything, including perception. ×××

ON YOUK, RAY AND NFL TRAINING CAMP

HAPPY RETURNS Let's hope Ellsbury stays healthy.

5 SUMMER SOX THOUGHTS

Disabled Hitter The only good thing about David Ortiz's injury is that it took some attention away from his contract soap opera. Other than that: huge bummer. We can only hope that Papi emerges from the DL healthy and ready for the home stretch. Otherwise, the Sox are screwed, and the owners might as well get started on their Bobby Valentine smear campaign.

Putting out an APB Jon Lester hasn't made many fans in Boston over the last three months, but you can bet that Josh Beckett's one of them. Thanks to Lester's underwhelming season, Beckett's looking better in comparison. Meanwhile, we scratch our heads, trying to figure out what happened to the most reliable and likable pitcher on the Sox staff. (For now, let's stick with what we know and blame John Lackey.)

Yooouk Kevin Youkilis was sent to Chicago, and suddenly, it's 2008. He's healthy. He's in shape. He's hitting for average and power. He no longer walks around looking like a guy who just smelled the world's thickest fart. And you know what? Good for Youk. I'm happy for him. But I still wouldn't change anything about the trade. No matter what's happened since, it was time for him to go.

Here Comes Adrian Don't look now, but Adrian Gonzalez (aka the most expensive singles hitter in baseball history) is starting to heat up. At press time, he's got his average up to .296, while ranking in the Top 10 in the AL in hits (105) and the Top 5 in doubles (27). He's even rediscovered a little bit of that power! Although I'm sure that's just by accident.

Dashing Duo I've given Carl Crawford a lot of crap, but let me just say how much I love seeing him and Jacoby Ellsbury back at the top of the lineup. It's amazing! They make the Sox a completely different team. Sadly, by the time you read this, one or both of them has already been injured. But hey, it was fun while it lasted.

ONE THING'S FOR SURE

Bruins GM Peter Chiarelli is a confident man. How else can we explain his super silent off-season? While the rest of the league improves through free agency, P.C.'s just kicking back with his feet up on the desk. Rick Nash? Bobby Ryan? "Oh, no. We're fine." Let's hope he's right, or else Timmy gets the last laugh.

GRONK NATION
Don't get me wrong, I loved the Summer of Gronk. But at the same time, I'm ready for him to be a football player again. The off-the-field stuff isn't as entertaining when it's been six months since he's caught a touchdown.

CARRY THE LOAD
BenJarvus Green-Ellis didn't have a ton of carries last season, but he still ran it more than twice as much as anyone else. He took 46 percent of the Pats' total handoffs. So what's the plan now? Is it Stevan Ridley's job to lose? Does Joseph Addai have anything left? Has anyone contacted Marion Butts?

RAY ALLEN FOR 3

Miami Blues Like everyone, I was sorry to see Allen go. But in pure basketball terms, I think the C's are better off without him. Bottom line: Ray was unhappy. And the things he was unhappy about weren't going to change. Basically, this was another Youkilis situation in the making. No, thank you. Congrats to Ray for five amazing years.

Jet Stream Jason Terry's another reason they can bear to lose Ray. All things considered, I'm not sure there was another free agent who fit better with what Boston's trying to do. He's experienced. He's versatile. He's clutch. He ENJOYS coming off the bench. Did I mention he has the Larry O'Brien trophy tattooed onto his forearm?

Holiday Fun Planning ahead, what do you think about the upcoming schedule: Celtics at Heat on Opening Night and Heat at Celtics on Christmas? That sounds about right. The league would be crazy to have it any other way. Then again, David Stern is pretty insane.

4 DATES TO WATCH

7/25: It's the moment we've all been waiting for—Liverpool FC vs. Roma FC, LIVE at Fenway Park! Thanks again, John Henry. Best summer ever!

7/26: Training camp kicks off in Foxborough... and Danny Woodhead returns it for a touchdown.

7/27: The London Olympics are ready to begin. How did everyone do in their fantasy badminton draft?

8/4: Curtis Martin's inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame. (Call me crazy, but I'd still rather have Sedrick Shaw.)

"I can't even hear anything because I'm so in the zone when I'm competing."

Soroff On ALY RAISMAN

The Olympic gymnast tells us about her work ethic, her fashion taste and the toughest judges in the game.

THREE-TIME WORLD CHAMPIONSHIP MEDALIST ALY RAISMAN, 18, is representing the USA in the London Olympics. A native of Needham, she was the only female gymnast featured in Vogue's 2012 Olympic preview. Regarded as one of the world's best tumblers, she began gymnastics when she was just 18 months old. Raisman realized she wanted to be an Olympic athlete at the age of 10, and she keeps a journal of her experiences that she hopes someday to publish. She has volunteered with the Special Olympics, and earned sponsorships from Kellogg's, Ralph Lauren, Gillette, and Got Milk? She lives with her parents and three younger siblings in Needham.

Jonathan Soroff: So do you have a crush on Prince Harry?
Aly Raisman: No, I don't, but I like William and Kate a lot because they do a lot of charity work, and I really like Kate's fashion sense.

Souvenir you want to bring back, besides a medal?
All the Olympic clothing. I think it's so cool to be able to wear a shirt with the Olympic rings that says London on it.

What do you think of the uniforms?
I really like them. I'm one of the Ralph Lauren athletes, actually, and I got to go on the Today show and show them. I really like the Village wear. It's a great mix of preppy and vintage.

Are you nervous about having billions of people watching you?
I don't really like to think about that. Just being able to represent the USA and doing the best I can, and experiencing the whole thing will be really cool.

Ever practice your pose for the Wheaties box?
[Laughs.] No, never.

Name three things you can do that I can't.
I can do flips from the beam and tumbling and…

Can you touch your head with your feet?
Yup. I can do that.

Favorite name of a gymnastics move?
They're all kind of funny, but I guess my favorite is "amanar." It's a cool word. It's a two-and-a-half twisting vault.

Is Nadia Comaneci an idol of yours?
Definitely. I think everyone looks up to her because she was the first gymnast to get a 10, and she was always so dedicated. My coach actually worked with her when he was younger, and he says she was a really, really hard worker. She's proof that all the hard work pays off.

Are you totally type A?
I think when I'm in the gym I am, but when I'm outside the gym, I'm kind of crazy and like to have fun. My room's always a mess. I like to relax, but in the gym I'm a perfectionist.

Who's your toughest competition?
I think all the girls on the U.S. team are really fierce competitors, but the Russians, the Chinese and the Romanians are the ones to watch out for. But you never really know 'til you're competing who your competition is.

Event you don't like?
The bars. I love to perform on floor, and it's where I'm more confident, but I like challenges, so it makes me much more determined in the gym to work on that.

Body part that hurts the most after practice?
After a long, hard day, my legs feel almost dead.

What do you do about that?
I don't finish until nine at night. I train seven to seven-and-a-half hours a day, so I'm not really that good about doing stuff for myself. I get massages three times a week, but generally, I just come home from practice, take a shower and go to sleep.

What does life after the Olympics look like?
Long-term, I definitely want to go to college, and I'd like to do something in fashion. But I'm focused on the Olympics now. And I might want to try for the 2016 Olympics.

What negatively impacts your performance?
I think I'm the type of person who really needs her rest. If I don't take a nap that really affects me for the night workout. I need a good night's sleep, also, because that's how your muscles recover.

Most interesting place you ever competed?
When I was 15, I went to Brazil, and we trained outside. It was so hot, and obviously there was no air-conditioning, so that was interesting.

Favorite music to use for your routine?
My floor music right now is "Hava Nagila."

How do you get yourself to practice when you just don't feel like it?
There are multiple times during the week when I'm really tired and don't even want to get out of bed. But then I think about making the team and representing the USA, and that's what really motivates me. When I feel like I can't do it, or I keep falling, I just look to my coaches. They say, "Even if you feel like you're dying, nobody cares, so just go out and do it."

Olympian you'd most like to meet?
Michael Phelps.

If you could have one super power, what would it be?
I'd like to fly.

How do you tune out the crowds?
I just naturally block everything out, and I can't even hear anything because I'm so in the zone when I'm competing.

Do you have a party trick you like to do to impress people?
No. When I'm with my friends, I don't really like to talk about gymnastics. I'm Aly, not a gymnast.

Which country has the toughest judges?
The Russian judges are pretty tough.

Endorsement you'd love to get?
I've always really wanted to do a Subway commercial. That would be so cool. Or a makeup ad. ×××

pluck BE A LADY

Female-driven kitchens inspire a new generation of talented women.

BY LINH TRAN BRINCAT / PHOTOGRAPHS BY ADAM DETOUR

FIFTEEN CHEFS, representing the stylized, wrought cooking coming from Ken Oringer's flagship restaurant over the course of 15 years, worked studiously, side-by-side in Clio's gleaming kitchen. Some are now nationally prominent figures, but at Clio's anniversary dinner they stood together, concentrating on their own dishes, buoyed by their peers' proximity. The evening was a triumphant moment that spoke to professional camaraderie and success in a tough business, as well as Boston's prominence as an incubator for culinary talent. It was also an eerie, one-sided scene, as it was almost utterly devoid of women.

In a town rightfully famous for its trailblazing female chefs, where Julia Child helped introduce American families to fresh vegetables and unprocessed foods, and Lydia Shire fine-tuned the buttery possibilities of French cooking, women have hardly disappeared from the dining scene. They can be found in other kitchens. But where and why are subject to debate, depending on whom you ask.

ACCORDING TO ORINGER, "It's harder to attract women in the fine-dining scene." Whereas his more casual South End eateries, Coppa and Toro, employ a sizable number of talented women, Oringer recounts that there were lean years, including this one, when none applied to work at Clio. He explains that women coming out of top culinary schools are drawn to New York City, San Francisco and Los Angeles, and that they favor casual restaurants because those businesses are more financially practical in a weak economy. There's also less stress involved. "I've seen men undercut women," he says. "At Clio, we've fired people for it. Aki Kamozawa [who started the influential blog Ideas in Food with her husband, H. Alexander Talbot, another Clio alum] was the first woman who worked at Clio. Even she—who met her husband here—had a rocky, rocky road, and she had to leave the kitchen."

Whereas Oringer sees Clio's drought of female talent as emblematic of a larger trend in fine dining, Barbara Lynch scoffs at the idea that women don't want to work in elite kitchens. "I'm loaded with them," declares Lynch, the sole owner of eight businesses. She lists at least half a dozen within her empire, like rising stars Bethany Hiltebeitel of Menton and Kristen Kish at Stir, and adds archly, "So don't tell me there are no women."

Jody Adams, owner of Rialto and co-owner of Trade, is more direct, stating, "I'd say he's wrong. That is so not true." Adams broke into the business after meeting Julia Child at a Planned Parenthood fund-raiser and she cut her teeth with Shire and Gordon Hamersley at Seasons at the Bostonian Hotel. "The restaurant world is a very difficult place to have a life," she says. "Most women look to be in a supportive environment, and many fine-dining restaurants have a culture—witness the TV shows with chefs yelling—that doesn't foster that." Employing seven female cooks at Rialto and five at Trade, Adams adds that if your restaurant doesn't draw or retain women, then you should reexamine the dynamics in your kitchen.

CAROLYN JOHNSON, executive chef at lauded 80 Thoreau in Concord, is an Adams protégée. "I made a conscious decision to work for a woman chef," the soft-spoken Johnson recalls. Part of her reasoning was what she describes as "a more inviting, more nurturing vibe" in Adams' kitchen. Recounting her seven years at Rialto, where she rose from line cook to chef de cuisine, Johnson appreciated the collaborative tone set by Adams' even-keel management, "It wasn't a yelling kitchen, a beat-you-down and make-you-feel-small place. Jody taught me about finding the strong part of any individual and helping them overcome weaknesses." Adams returns the compliments: "I think Carolyn Johnson is a star. We work really well together."

A collaborative kitchen seems to be the key to Oleana's allure for top female talent. Cassie Kyriakides Piuma, chef de cuisine at Ana Sortun's Mediterranean and Middle-Eastern dining destination in Cambridge, credits Sortun's mentorship for her long stint at Oleana. In a business where it's not uncommon to change employers year to year, Sortun has managed to retain Piuma for nine years and the award-winning pastry chef Maura Kilpatrick for 11. Kilpatrick says, "It's a nurturing environment, and you're given a lot of space." Piuma agrees. "We're given a lot of creative license and freedom, which is a gift to develop your own personality. If you have talent, passion and drive, you'll get notice." Sortun has been helping Piuma get over her shyness by encouraging her to teach cooking classes at Oleana's sister bakery/cafe Sofra on weekends, and is coy about a restaurant in the works in which Piuma will be involved. "It's good to have people push you to do things. It's very inspiring," Piuma says. "You feel empowered to help other people."

"You should stand for what you deserve."

Mary Dumont, executive chef at Harvest in Cambridge, finds herself pulling her female cooks, who number five out of 26, aside to stress the importance of differentiating themselves, and to tell them her story, "I needed to be better because I'm a woman. Coming up, it was just harder across the board 20 years ago." She remembers attending a competition in Germany, where she noticed that out of 500 chefs, only three were female. "I thought, 'This is how it's going to be. This is how it's always going to be.'"

She encourages all her cooks to ask for help and to diversify their skills, so as not to rely on one aspect of their talent. Dumont also finds that a well-constructed guilt trip does wonders for motivating her cooks and servers. "I'm never not polite, but I've made people cry for being schmucks." When someone is being lazy, she might guilt them with a foolproof scenario, "What if your customer just came from visiting their dying mother or saved up all year to dine here?" Adding with mock outrage, "And you're going to send out overcooked fish or floppy-skinned chicken?" While her methods can be mischievous, Dumont takes her goal of maintaining the restaurant's stature with a serious intensity. "It's my job to protect Harvest's reputation. It's not a joke."

One of Dumont's favorite lessons to her cooks—never be afraid to ask for help—is one that Rachel Klein, executive chef at the Mandarin Oriental, Boston, had to learn the hard way. "I hated asking for help," Klein says. "I was passed over for a position because I couldn't lug 50 pounds of bones up the stairs." (Told of this, Adams says, "If they fire you, you shouldn't be there anyway because they're aholes.") Klein is adept at juggling two small children while overseeing the food program for Asana and the rest of the hotel. Brought on in March, she's putting her deft touches to the international menu, which includes fluffy lobster beignets with bits of Chinese sausage, an ingredient she was introduced to by former employer Anita Lo in New York City. "I sought out women chefs to work with because you hope they'll take the time to invest in you," Klein says, echoing Johnson. Although Klein's schedule doesn't permit much socializing, she credits women chefs with making her feel welcome when she came to Cambridge to open Om years ago. "Jody sent me flowers my first week. I love Lydia, Barbara, Ana. They're in their kitchens. Every time I've been to Scampo, Lydia's been there."

The matriarch of Boston fine dining, Shire still evokes praise as exuberant as her persona from chefs of all stripes, male and female. Known for her fearlessness in pursuing her professional vision—evidenced by her championing of an offal menu at Biba at least a decade before it became trendy—Shire wasn't always such a paragon of confidence. "I was a little meek and mild inside," she recalls of her evolution. "It took me three months to tell a cook that he wasn't browning the butter enough for a dish. I've had to get over that shyness. Now I let anything rip." A mother of three by the age of 21, she was desperate to land her first kitchen job as salad girl at Maison Robert and was wracking her brain for ideas to impress. "I thought, 'You're a woman, and you want to distinguish yourself,'" Shire says. So she made a seven-layer cake with French buttercream to take to the interview. She was hired on the spot.

Although Shire was conscious of being a woman in a male industry, she shrugs off the disparity, surmising it's a matter of women seeking out other female chefs. "Maybe people gravitate to other people like them," she says. Voicing a gross understatement, she adds, "Maybe I had a good influence with women."

BOSTON'S FEMALE chefs might have a lot of mutual respect and admiration, but they don't have a lot of time to hang out. More established in their careers, Shire and Lynch are exceptions. "Barbara takes me over to the Quencher, her local bar in South Boston," Shire says. "I love Barbara. She's a sweetheart. My relationship with her is the same as that Wellesley guy [Ming Tsai] hanging out with Ken Oringer." Lynch also sees Sortun regularly, as their daughters are good friends. "We're best buds," Lynch says. "We vacation together, but we don't talk about business."

Shire is also close to her protégée Susan Regis, executive chef for the last seven years at UpStairs on the Square, whom she calls, "the best cook in Boston." Regis, who first worked with Shire at Biba and then helped her open the Four Seasons in L.A., passed up opportunities to helm more prominent kitchens so that she could retain control over her cuisine. Asked for examples of the collaborative relationship she shared with Shire, Regis says, "I have 50 menus—hundreds of examples—written from Biba that are representative of that."

"You just have to do your job well."

While it was through a mixture of luck and cunning that she trained entirely with Shire (having fabricated a résumé to get her foot in the door), Regis is thoughtful about why female cooks are pulled toward each other. "I think sometimes women aren't as confident as they seem," she says. "You may need more emotional support than men ostensibly need." The lesson she tries to emphasize is also one that her colleague Adams highlights: "You should stand for what you deserve, and if you don't get that, demand it."

Embodying a take charge, fearless attitude among the younger generation, Tiffani Faison, owner of Sweet Cheeks, has learned to trust her instincts. After working with several high-profile chefs, she found herself struggling with "finding the balance between pulling the trigger [on her own place] and studying and being capable." Her popular barbecue restaurant employs seven women out of 14 in its kitchen. "I have a lot of women and gay people working for me," she says. "When you work for someone like you, you don't have to worry about being a target. You just have to do your job well."

Seeing these women lead in the kitchen, and outside it, is important to many girls in Toni Elka's nonprofit program, Future Chefs. Out of 215 high school and college-aged participants over the last five years, half of them are female. "A lot of our students are first-generation Americans and come from a culture where girls are expected to sublimate their desires to their families." To teach these girls to be more assertive, Elka has placed them with Lynch and Adams and enrolled them in summer programs that bring them to the countryside and away from family demands.

It's not just female chefs providing the foundation for future talent. Elka credits Barry Maiden, chef at Hungry Mother, for mentoring Aly Lopez, a former Future Chef student who's now employed full time at the Cambridge restaurant. "He engaged her in the team and made her feel valued. She's worked at every station, and in any given night, can hold down any position," Elka says proudly.

It's certainly a positive sign for future kitchens, and not just in terms of their cuisine. Says Faison: "We're not just cooks. I run a business, I manage relationships." ✖✖✖

CHAOS AND CALAMITY TOP THE MENU WHEN RESTAURANTS LAUNCH.

By Nancy Gaines

It WAS OPENING NIGHT for friends and family—a mere 300–400 people—at a new restaurant in an old building near South Station. Then a chef/owner's worst nightmare came true: The entire septic system failed.

"Every toilet backed up," says Beth Cannon, who was a bartender at the establishment that prefers to stay nameless. "It was leaking up through the floor grates. We were sandbagging the bar. There was no draining in the sinks. And people wouldn't leave."

"The night is over," she announced time and again, "but these people were all dressed up, and drunk, and would not leave. They were using the bathrooms at other bars and coming back. It took hours to clear the place."

Cannon says management wasn't to be seen. "Maybe they were working behind the scenes, calling City Hall." But on the big night, "it was just us, the bartenders, up there alone. Whatever the regular usage of the system for the rest of the building, it wasn't 300 people drinking.

"You work, you train, you polish, you're ready—and you spend the whole night bleaching the floors," says Cannon, who went on to tend bar at Eastern Standard Kitchen & Drinks.

Be it a cock-up, kerfuffle or outright calamity, opening night obeys Murphy's Law like bloopers follow Biden. And since opening night now often comprises a series of "soft" openings to iron out the wrinkles before a grand opening, opportunities for mishaps are endless.

The goofs are not always a reflection on the effort or talent of the chef or owners. It happens to the best prepared. The trick is in how the restaurateur and staff overcome the indignities.

PROPRIETOR OF TWO PLACES in the North End, Damien DiPaola saw not one but both restaurants delayed before their openings, first in 2008, then 2011, due to red tape. He estimates he lost about $25,000 gross per week for 14 weeks. The total bill: about $700,000.

With the opening of Ristorante Damiano (now Carmelina's) on Hanover Street, "I was ready by April (2008)," he says. "I own the property, and my tenant's lease had expired in December. He took his beer and wine license with him. I bought another. But the City of Boston wouldn't let me open until the old license had a 'proper home.' How crazy is that? Cost me the whole summer."

When he tried to open Vito's Tavern on Salem Street, the delay stretched from April to August of last year. Says DiPaola, it was "because the previous tenant hadn't paid his taxes. You can't really blame the city, but between all the bureaucracies, they sure don't make it easy to open a business, pay meals taxes and hire people."

Nancy Mickiewicz of the Boston Licensing Board explains that, yes, a liquor license attaches to a place, not a person. So the new holder must transfer the license to a new address before the previous place can be recertified. The state Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission won't authorize an opening until all state taxes, liens and fees on the property—old and current—are paid in full. This can lead to hurt feelings, to say the least.

By sheer numbers, Todd English is the warhorse of the opening process. He's been through "70 to 75, if you count my consulting, managing, owning and all." This includes arguably the longest-delayed reopening in the city.

Olives, his flagship in Charlestown, launched 23 years ago, but closed after a grease fire in 2010. The restaurant didn't reopen until last month. He wrestled with the city licensing board over the attenuated construction, appearing before them at least four times, during which he got scolded that he better hurry up or lose his license.

"It certainly took longer than we wanted," says English. "We'd uncover one thing and fix it, and discover another, like remodeling a house. We wanted to do it right and that took extra time. And money."

English adds that the travails of restaurant openings—here or in New York or Las Vegas—are rote. "The AC wouldn't work, or we'd get pretty popular and be overcrowded. We'd have to pull people outside, which is not nice, but we'd give them hors d'oeuvres while they waited."

IT TOOK EIGHT MONTHS BETWEEN conception and completion of Brain Poe's new hotspot, the Tip Tap Room on Cambridge Street in Beacon Hill. He well remembers the horrors and is in no rush to do it all again.

"When I first came to Boston," says Poe, also of Poe's Kitchen at the Rattlesnake on Boylston Street, "I palled around with guys with big boats. They used to talk about white squalls. I saw their eyes, and I knew. There are things you just don't joke about."

Opening Tip Tap "was a wild run," he says, pointing out that the first soft opening was in June, and there has yet to be a grand opening. "I was a little embarrassed at the first night," he says, "because I didn't expect the crowd."

Then there were the oopsies. "Someone got upset about something, I guess, and filled the toilets with paper towels. 'Hey, you got a plumber around?' one of my guys asks. Yeah, sure, why wouldn't I have a plumber on hand? Then there's the cook doing Facebook on my touch screen, and the computers freeze. Entrees are served before apps. There are people here for two hours for a birthday dinner, and we forget the birthday candles."

Then it rained. "And I have French drains that I just spent $30,000 on, and they flood."

The very next morning, his crew was cooking up pots of stock boiled from scratch.

"The steam sets off the fire alarm, so I get to know the whole fire department that's two blocks down."

Opening night, says Poe, was "very emotional. I got Yelped in the first 20 minutes. And I thought, how can I come back to you on this? I've only been here 20 minutes!"

FOR RON ABELL, SENIOR EXECUTIVE chef for Fenway Park, every year brings a brand new opening day, with resulting horrors. For the stadium's premium areas, Abell fields a team of some 120, half of them rookies. They have to serve fans at about a dozen "restaurants," from the luxury boxes and private suites to the catering operations for game-day and non–game-day festivities.

"It's controlled chaos," says Abell, who came to Fenway six years ago from the more rarefied perches of Icarus, Maison Robert and Biba. Under the auspices of the corporate food–service provider Aramark's apprenticeship program, "Every first week in April, we have a new team of students and interns, all greenhorns," he says. "There are 150 different ways to prep food. And each opening, I've got 50–60 newbies who all do it differently." Fortunately, he's got veterans on staff like executive chef Nookie Postal, who was featured on this season's reality-TV show Around the World in 80 Plates. But Abell's still dealing with a lot of crossed signals, not to mention oddly chopped lettuces.

"This is a ballpark, but our customers know good food. If some big executive thinks his fish is overcooked, I may be on the other side of the park, but I have to take care of it," says Abell. "There are so many components. The owners are constantly doing big projects, and it can be the 12th hour, and there's still construction going on. Every season is a new opener, on the field and in the kitchen."

Opening night was a two-year goal for Alexis Gelburd-Kimler, who took her time moving from managing Aquitaine in the South End to launching West Bridge in Kendall Square this May. "For months, my partner [chef Matthew Gaudet] and I sat across from each other during construction making lists. I'm a crazy list-maker," says Gelburd-Kimler. "And you won't believe all the things we forgot."

Toilet-paper holders ("I ran home and screwed one off my wall,"), steak knives ("We went with the generic,"), even coffee creamers. "Matthew and I have been in this business a long time, maybe 30 years combined. Here we spent millions of dollars, and still forgot the little things."

But for Gelburd-Kimler, opening is "the best high and the most stressful high. Watching your staff work together for the first time, it's like watching your child walk: painful scary."

But, she adds, "You have to let go." ✖✖✖

Todd English's TIPS FOR A RESTAURANT OPENING PARTY

- Make sure your invite list is the right mix of loyal customers, VIPs and fun people. They help create energy.
- Music should not drown out conversation, but should be heard enough to get people moving.
- It helps to have drinks both passed and available at the bar. Many people like to have a drink in hand when they walk into a party. I like to have a signature cocktail with an entertaining name available for guests, as well. This helps when you have a liquor sponsor that you'd like to promote.
- As the host, don't stay in the kitchen. Be out there mingling.
- Some of the best parties we've had included an interactive element where guests were either watching and participating in a cooking demo, cocktails being made or a red carpet photo shoot.
- This is a chance to showcase the menu. One of the biggest missteps of restaurant openings is that there isn't enough food being passed around.
- Don't turn people away at the door who may not have known about the opening party and were just coming for dinner. Either invite them in to enjoy the event or give them a business card with a note on the back inviting them in again with a complimentary appetizer.

Refresher Course

ORIGIN OF THE SPIRIT

MCMILLAN Distillery president Curtis McMillan has heard the phrase, "I can't stand gin," one too many times. So he's seeking out nonbelievers and aficionados alike to explore the complexities of a deceivingly simple cocktail.

In a class at Gordon's Fine Wine & Culinary Center in Waltham, McMillan dissects the classic gin and tonic, covering origins, common myths, and how to identify and enjoy tastes beyond the fundamental juniper berry. By experimenting with different gins and concocting a tonic during the class, students will find a style of the spirit that best suits their taste buds.

Movies Edited by Kyle Wright

Reviews by Sean Burns

The Amazing Spider-Man ★ ½ It's déjà vu all over again in this lazy, rote retelling of the web slinger's origin story, rebooted a mere 10 years since Sam Raimi's effervescent adaptation for the sole purpose of allowing Sony to keep the movie rights. That's correct, it's a film that exists only as contract extension, and this two-and-a-half hour slog feels as inspired as that sounds. The Social Network's Andrew Garfield pouts and poses, as the title role has been recast as a somber Twilight-type haunted by his missing parents (who are teased to figure prominently in a sequel that's scheduled to hit theaters in 2014). That's the rub with modern franchise filmmaking: Everybody's too busy planning for subsequent installments that they forget to tell a coherent story in the first. Director Marc Webb has no sense of pacing or visual bravado, and the movie often grinds to a halt on curiously empty NYC streets. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Avengers ★★★ It was a rough takeoff. After five movies of buildup, the often crummy (see Thor, Iron Man 2, The Incredible Hulk) but occasionally wonderful (Captain America: The First Avenger) Marvel Films' strategy of building a bridge to nowhere at last pays off with a rock 'em, sock 'em, superhero spectacular, in which Earth's mightiest heroes team up to take on an alien invasion in midtown Manhattan. Playing out like a fanboy's nocturnal emission, we finally get to see what would happen if Iron Man fought Thor. But what makes the picture click is writer/director Joss Whedon's knack for snappy banter, as he supplies killer one-liners to Robert Downey Jr.'s debauched Tony Stark and plays to the fissure between Mark Ruffalo's laid-back line readings and his gigantic green alter ego. Massively scaled, coldly impersonal set pieces abound, but the character interactions zing. Whedon isn't much of an action director, but he's gifted with an overqualified cast and allows them to quip away to their hearts' content. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Beasts of the Southern Wild ★★★★ This Sundance sensation is one of the most poignant things I've ever seen. A portrait of a poor New Orleans community bracing for Hurricane Katrina, Beasts of the Southern Wild is so infused with fanciful flourishes that most of the time it feels like Days of Heaven by way of The Road Warrior. Young Quvenzhané Wallis stars as six-year-old Hushpuppy, who lives with her alcoholic father (Dwight Henry) in a junkyard community called the Bathtub. Director Benh Zeitlin drops us into this world with no explanation, and it may take a while to adjust to the harsh environment and oddball speech patterns. Oh, and there are also recently unfrozen, prehistoric aurochs roaming through the proceedings. It's a purposefully abstract piece, never a movie about "poverty" or "Katrina," but about something much harder to pin down. Eventually, it all comes down to Hushpuppy's indomitable spirit and a final shot that sends you soaring out of the theater. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

The Hunger Games ★ ½ Seabiscuit director Gary Ross' careless version of Suzanne Collins' popular best-seller is my least favorite kind of adaptation—a timid affair so preoccupied with checking off plot points to please the established fanbase that it can't be bothered to engage the uninitiated. Jennifer Lawrence stars as a quick-witted teenage archer tossed into a horrific annual reality-TV tournament, during which poor children are forced to fight to the death for the amusement of the one percent. There's a nasty satirical point being made here, but I'll be damned if Ross knows what it is. Lacking the budget or scope for what's being attempted, this future dystopia is a lot of chintzy costumes, bad wigs and hambone character actors. Presumably attempting to obscure the limited production design and keep the violence to a PG-13 rating, Ross shoots The Hunger Games in jerky ellipses submerged in murky cinematography. Most of the time it's downright impossible to follow what's happening on-screen. I know you loved the book, but this is terrible filmmaking. (At Somerville Theatre and in the suburbs.)

Magic Mike ★★★ ½ Director Steven Soderbergh's sideways take on Channing Tatum's origin story finds pathos beneath the beefcake. Inspired more by Saturday Night Fever than The Full Monty, it gyrates comfortably alongside Soderbergh's The Girlfriend Experience as a detached portrait of sex workers in a floundering economy. Tatum's goofy, aging stripper is suddenly forced to reevaluate a life of go-nowhere day jobs and boogie nights once he recruits the Kid (Alex Pettyfer) into his backstage world of manscaped pelvic thrusts. There are threesomes and drugs. But, as usual, Soderbergh eyes it all with clinical reserve, aiming for a painterly sociological study of a cash-only subculture living for the moment, because tomorrow is something that requires equity and an acceptance that dangles beyond the characters' grasps. Lording over them all is Matthew McConaughey in a showstopping turn as the slightly sinister, self-parodying club owner whose delusional grandeur suggests a bare-chested Mephistopheles. Between bumps and grinds, the film has a lot to say about class structure in America today. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Men in Black 3 ★ ½ A decade late, this lumbering $215 million behemoth stumbles into theaters punch-drunk, top-heavy and sweating so hard it's all but barren of laughs. Accounting for the monumental indifference of Tommy Lee Jones, Will Smith reportedly came up with the idea for a time-traveling villain to murder Jones' Agent K back in 1969, sending Big Willie on a Terminator-style mission to a groovier era to save his partner (well-impersonated by Josh Brolin). Don't worry about all the alternate time-line paradoxes that would obviously ensue, because the multiple screenwriters didn't bother. There's a bit of lip service about how a man of Smith's complexion might have a tough time in that tumultuous era, a potentially interesting conceit from which the picture retreats. Men in Black 3 started shooting back in September 2010 without a finished script, and now that all the reshoots, red herrings and character backgrounds have been patched together, it doesn't make a lick of sense. (In the suburbs.)

Killing Time

Dead of Night

The title may brim with fairy-tale promise, but this new film from Turkish director Nuri Bilge Ceylan never reaches "happily ever after." Once Upon a Time in Anatolia takes place during a Turkish night, as a police officer, prosecutor, doctor and murder suspect travel through the countryside in search of a missing body. While the story unfolds, secrets about the killing (and the investigators) come to light. Moviegoers can catch this Cannes Grand Prize winner on July 25 at the Brattle Theatre.

Moonrise Kingdom ★★★★ Director Wes Anderson's dollhouse sets and Peanuts costumes can sometimes distract from the pathos and heartbreak lurking beneath the surface of his twee tales of damaged men who refuse to grow up. While Moonrise Kingdom is Anderson's most meticulously designed picture, it's also his most emotionally accessible. Riffing on the young-lovers-on-the-lam genre (with plenty of shout-outs to Badlands and Pierrot Le Fou), the film finds star-crossed 12-year-olds running away from home on the fictional New England island of New Penzance during the summer of 1965. The adults in pursuit are a classically broken bunch, with Edward Norton as a scoutmaster out of his league, Bill Murray as a cuckold in denial and the pitch-perfect Bruce Willis as a heartbroken cop called "the sad dumb policeman" behind his back. Shot in gorgeously grainy Super 16mm, Moonrise Kingdom alternates between the flush of first love and the ache of middle-aged compromise. Just lovely. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Neil Young Journeys ★★★ There's a town in North Ontario, and this third collaboration between the tireless rocker and director Jonathan Demme takes us there in a 1956 Crown Vic, ambling around spots from Young's childhood. Wry anecdotes punctuate thrilling footage from Young's 2011 concert at the fabled Massey Hall, in which '70s chestnuts alternate with new songs from his recent album Le Noise, as the folk rocker takes to the stage solo, relying only on an armada of organs and guitar distortion pedals to create a rollicking wall of sound. Can all this glorious cacophony be coming solely from an elderly gentleman in an old-fashioned hat? Seeking ever more intimacy with his idol, Demme overdoes it a bit with the onstage camera placement. One particular howler is a digital recorder on the bottom of Young's microphone, which brings us so up close and personal that an entire song is viewed through a glob of the singer's spit. Still, here's a stirring performance from an artist who sleeps less than rust. (At Kendall Square.)

People Like Us ★ ½ This movie is predicated on misunderstandings that would never transpire if only the characters bothered to learn each other's last names. Transformers screenwriter Alex Kurtzman's directorial debut stars Chris Pine as Sam, the kind of callow yuppie that Tom Cruise could play in his sleep. (Unfortunately, Chris Pine is no Tom Cruise.) After the death of his estranged father, he receives a shaving kit full of $100 bills and instructions to give them to a mysterious other family he didn't know he had. Sam's long-lost sister (Elizabeth Banks) is a recovering alcoholic with a delinquent kid, and instead of just handing her the money, we spend a very long movie with Sam pathologically lying and cozying up to her for reasons that don't make any sense. Michelle Pfeiffer attempts to cry through her Botox, and it's hard to feel much sympathy for people too stupid to ask the obvious questions. (In the suburbs.)

Prometheus ★★ Director Ridley Scott's space odyssey attempts to rework remnants of his 1979 masterpiece Alien by ditching the blue-collar reality and lean screenwriting in favor of enough gaseous philosophizing about the origin of the species to fuel a dorm-room bong session. Alas, we're back in Chariots of the Gods territory, with extraterrestrial thugs foiling creationism while a band of scientists follow clues from some ancient cave paintings to a distant planet, hoping to meet our makers. From moment to moment, Prometheus is gorgeous. The best-looking stupid movie I've seen in years, the film is a triumph of production design but a screenwriting disaster. Starting with Noomi Rapace's Christian Darwinist (hello, contradictions), these characters refuse to abide by any sort of logic. There's a nifty performance by Michael Fassbender as an android obsessed with Lawrence of Arabia, but most of his actions remain inexplicable. It's more like a trailer for the inevitable sequels. In space, no one can hear you groan. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Queen of Versailles ★★★ ½ Originally intended as a snickering portrait of the grotesquely wealthy David and Jackie Siegel's quest to build the biggest, tackiest homestead in the history of real estate, director Lauren Greenfield's research lucked into a recession, and the economic collapse transformed a bit of reality-show lookie-loo into a strangely empathetic depiction of what happens when billionaires are suddenly forced to live like mere millionaires. Once, Siegel was the nation's most successful Florida time-share hustler, selling dreams of luxury to those who could barely afford them. But the chickens come home to roost with a vengeance after 2008's Wall Street disaster, and his adorably dim-witted trophy wife, Jackie, with breasts inflated to the size of basketballs, never quite grasps the enormity of the cataclysm. You can tell how much time has gone by in this picture by the amount of dog crap littering the carpet, as the couple's absurd manse lapses into decay. Their plight becomes America's writ large, except more tasteless. (At Kendall Square.)

Safety Not Guaranteed ★★ Aubrey Plaza's disdain gets such a workout every week on Parks and Recreation that she's become the poster girl for scorn made sexy. Finally given her own vehicle, Plaza does her best to carry a wheezy collection of Sundance stereotypes on her shoulders, but Safety Not Guaranteed is one of those half-finished films that plays better at festivals. As an intern for a trendy magazine, Plaza finds herself investigating a classified ad placed by a purported time-traveler who's really just a mentally ill dollar-store clerk. Subject to the whims of her hedonistic boss (a very funny Jake M. Johnson), Plaza's character cozies up with this adorable crackpot and the love story blooms in time with some acoustic guitar montages. Produced by indie exemplars Jay and Mark Duplass, Safety Not Guaranteed suffers from their trademark twee music cues, garbage cinematography and tiny wisp of a script. Plaza can carry a movie, just not this one. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Savages ★★★ Oliver Stone's scattergun satire hits more often than it misses in this nasty little number, which adapts Don Winslow's novel into a take-no-prisoners attack on the futility of the war on drugs. Blake Lively offers up some presumably deliberate awful narration as a vacuous beach bum frolicking in a blissful ménage a trois with marijuana entrepreneurs played by Aaron Johnson and Taylor Kitsch. But there's trouble in paradise when Mexico's Baja cartel comes calling, here led by Salma Hayek in a Bettie Page wig. Johnson and Lively are deadweights on the narrative, but Savages springs to life in the margins. There's a grotesque turn by Benicio Del Toro as a shifty enforcer prone to sickly comic flourishes, and a paunchy, balding John Travolta delivers his best performance in years as a wormy DEA agent attempting to play both sides against the middle. Savages is lurid, violent and occasionally silly. It's also gutsy, rousing and electric. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Snow White and the Huntsman ★ ½ That mirror on the wall that Charlize Theron is constantly consulting is obviously broken, because it keeps telling her that Kristen Stewart's Snow White is the fairest of them all. Fairer than Charlize Theron? Yeah, right. This year's second reworking of the Grimm fairy tale plunges into Lord of the Rings territory, with director Rupert Sanders shoplifting images and a self-serious tone from every swords-and-CGI opus from the past few years. Theron vamps it up at late-career Faye Dunaway levels as the wicked queen, while Chris Hemsworth aches in the background as the titular huntsman, pining away with little to do besides lend the movie a Twilight-style love triangle. Things get really weird when a spate of Britain's finest character actors (Ian McShane, Ray Winstone, Bob Hoskins, etc.) find their heads grafted onto tiny bodies as Snow White's dwarf sidekicks, but the movie remains as inert as Stewart's slouchy, disinterested performance. She looks as bored as I felt. (In the suburbs.)

Take This Waltz ★★★ ½ The marginalization of movie theaters continues with Magnolia Pictures releasing titles via Video on Demand upwards of a month prior to theatrical release. This is a thorny issue, but however one chooses to see Sarah Polley's heartfelt sophomore directorial effort, it's a film worth watching. Michelle Williams stars as a happy housewife settled into a routine with her hubby of five years, played with affable obliviousness by Seth Rogen. But everything ruptures once she meets their new neighbor (Luke Kirby), a shy artist who trots around in a rickshaw and secretly yearns for the married lady across the street. Keenly sensitive to the inconvenience of desire, Polley (who also wrote the screenplay) dances around their tentative courtship, with the couple increasingly weighed down by the knowledge that their happiness will only result in misery for others. A couple of misjudged surreal flourishes muck up the movie's lived-in rhythm, but is there a subtler, more emotionally transparent actress than Williams working today? Her silences speak volumes. (At Kendall Square and available via Video On Demand.)

Ted ★★ ½ Much like writer/director Seth MacFarlane's animated-TV shows, Ted is hysterical, until all of a sudden it isn't anymore. As most comedies these days revolve around man-children refusing to grow up, give MacFarlane credit for taking the gag to its logical conclusion and casting Mark Wahlberg as a 30-something who can't let go of his teddy bear. That the stuffed animal is a walking, talking drug user is only half of the joke. Seeking to settle down with his girlfriend, played by Mila Kunis—who unfortunately is presented as the same tired scold we see in most films in which women aren't allowed to be funny—Wahlberg's dopey meathead routine is a brilliant match for a perverted bear. Like all MacFarlane comedies, Ted leans mainly on non sequiturs and pop-culture references. His jokes rely on recognition, not wit. Still, it's all amusing for an hour or so, until it decides to have a plot. The third act is just stuffing. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

To Rome With Love ★★ ½ Last year's Midnight in Paris was profound in a breezy way. To Rome With Love is just plain breezy, but I didn't mind. Charming, second-tier Woody Allen, the film is a mashup of four disconnected shorts. (The picture sometimes feels as though Allen was rifling through his desk and came across some unfinished New Yorker pieces and decided to fashion them after the Italian omnibus films of the 1960s.) It's good to see Allen back on screen, kvetching and complaining his way through a Roman holiday when he discovers a brilliant opera singer who can only perform in the shower. There's some silliness with Roberto Benigni as an everyman who becomes inexplicably famous, and some bawdy jokes by Penélope Cruz as one of Allen's genius prostitutes. Best in show goes to Alec Baldwin as an aging architect revisiting his wayward youth and watching a younger version of himself make all the same mistakes. Clumsily stitched together, To Rome With Love is a trifle, but it's an agreeable one. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Dolled Up

Soled-out Show Amanda Palmer used to pay the bills as a living statue in Harvard Square. Today, this Lexington native is better known for her stint as one half of cult musical duo the Dresden Dolls. In 2008, Palmer left the Dolls to go it alone. With her third solo album, Theatre Is Evil, due for a September release, she's on a U.S. and European tour with her band, the Grand Theft Orchestra. Palmer returns home for a two-night engagement at the Middle East Downstairs on July 31 and Aug. 2. Caroline Praderio

girl scouts of eastern massachusetts

You were once a Girl Scout. You hiked trails and camped out under the stars. You canvassed your neighborhood to sell Thin Mints. You honed your skills with each badge you earned. You learned to lead.

Each of us has a success story to tell and memories to share. Reconnect with old friends, and support this new generation of girls.

You'll always be a Girl Scout. Visit hergirlscouts.org/alums

Flip Out

Cheerleaders are supposed to be bubbly. Crime writer Megan Abbott's cheerleaders stick a pin in that theory. Abbott's latest, Dare Me, exposes a sinister side of this spirited world, one that lies beneath the glittery surface of short-shorts and ponytails. The novel zeroes in on two varsity squad members at the top of the pyramid—until the arrival of a new coach spurs rivalry, betrayal and a high-stakes police investigation. Abbott takes the spotlight to rally the crowd at the Harvard Coop on Aug. 1. Caroline Praderio

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

BISTRO DU MIDI [272 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-426-7878, bistrodumidi.com] Bistro du Midi showcases authentic Provencal cuisine in a warm, welcoming, and beautiful setting. Inspired by the ingredients and culinary techniques of the Midi region in France, Executive Chef, Robert Sisca presents modern, ingredient-driven creations that are at once refined and approachable. From a carefully conceived charcuterie selection to the freshest seafood, meats and vegetables, Bistro du Midi brings the simple, clean and bold flavors of Provence to Boston.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

THE PURPLE SHAMROCK [1 Union Street, Boston, 617-227-2060, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the freedom trail across from Boston City Hall on Union Street. The Purple Shamrock is the perfect place to stop by and have a bite to eat. The fare is composed of New England specialties with burgers, sandwiches, hearty pastas, fresh seafood, tender steaks and other great favorites. Let's not forget their infamous Shamrock Brunch served every Saturday and Sunday that is often paired with live music. After dark, The Purple Shamrock has nightly entertainment with a mix of live music, karaoke and DJ's. At The Purple Shamrock there is something for everyone.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

Beer Specialty

Billiards

BIG CITY Pool hall, Pizza Kitchen, Beer Bar [138 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-782-2020, allstonsfinest.com] Big City is going Mexican. Come see our new renovation and the soon to be Patrons Mexican Kitchen & Watering Hole.

BRUNCH

THE BILTMORE BAR & GRILL [1205 Chestnut Street, Newton, 617-527-2550, thebiltmoregrill.com] Opened at the start of Prohibition, the Biltmore started out as a speakeasy and has been a neighborhood favorite in Newton's historic Upper Falls ever since. Brunch is served Saturday, Sunday and Monday holidays featuring creative menu items such as Huevos Tacos, Sausage Fritter Sandwich and Biltmore's famous Chicken & Waffles. Brunch libations such as the Danish Bloody Mary and Red Beer (The Cure!) help ease your way into the day.

LOCAL 149 [149 P Street, South Boston, 617-269-0900, local149.com] A neighborhood joint in South Boston's Citypoint, Local 149 offers historic roots and lots of heart & soul. Brunch is served Saturdays and Sundays featuring new classics from Chef Leah DuBois such as "Toast To Life and Bacon" and the "Lobster MacMuffin". 'Spicy Pimento Cheese Fries' and 'Dixie Chicken" start the day right washed down with a Bucket of High Life ponies or the $5 Milkshake.

MOOO.... [15 Beacon Street, Boston, 617-670-2515, mooorestaurant.com] In the shadow of Beacon Hill's lofty State House and within the grandeur of the XV Beacon Hotel is MOOO...., a steakhouse extraordin-aire. Chef David Hutton offers a modern approach of fine selected meat and seafood dishes. Breakfast and lunch weekdays, dinner daily, Sunday brunch, bar and lounge. An impressive Wine Cellar and discreet Parlor Suites are the solution to successful business entertaining and private dining. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] "Beer's not just for breakfast anymore." At the Sunset Super Sunday Brewers Brunch, try our thick-cut French toast, potato skins and eggs, eggs benny, crispy quesadillas or our All You Can Eat Brunch Taco Bar, including a free Sunday paper and your first beery mary or mimosa. Full menu also available. 112 taps, 300+ microbrews.

MONKEYING AROUND

That Chimp Could Use Some Restylane

Party animals, animal lovers and assorted other Homo sapiens were on hand to chow on chowder, pizza and assorted other delicious nibbles, while sipping cocktails and indulging their animal instincts at Zoo New England's A Wild Affair fund-raiser at the Stone Zoo.

Despite the uncooperative weather, guests got to see two newly hatched flamingos, a jaguar lounging in his enclosure, a colobus monkey, a sloth and other wild creatures. The evening's entertainment included an a capella group that seemed to startle the North American beaver minding its own business behind them.

Present and accounted for: the captivating Mimi Stith, the effervescent Lynn Crisci and her main squeeze, Doug Julian, Zoo New England head honcho John Linehan (who once was attacked by monkeys), banking bigwig Jan Houghton, state reps Jason Lewis and Paul Donato, and countless others.

During the live auction, one guest said, "The girl with the bright purple hair deserves to win for that alone," and a pungent topic of conversation was the 7,000 people who had gone to see the reeking corpse flower at the Franklin Park Zoo.

However, the most interesting nugget of zoo minutiae was the fact that at the Honolulu Zoo, one of the lemurs required liposuction.

"What's next?" asked a guest. "Botox for baboons?"

Everything Old Is New Again

Like a phoenix rising from the ashes, Todd English reopened the restaurant where it all began, Olives, with a party that was surprisingly familial and low-key despite the high glamour quotient.

Front and center were his two offspring, cupcake princess Isabelle and chip off the ol' block Oliver, blonde beauty Susan Charbonnier, steakhouse mogul Steve DeFillipo, regular laugh riot Tony V, City Hall hipster Tony Nunziante, stunning blonde Jenny Johnson, and one guest whose cell phone rang while he was talking to car czar Herb Chambers, and it turned out to be the service department at one of Chambers' dealerships.

Another highlight was when someone mentioned the time Bill Gates passed out up against the bathroom door.

"It's a whole new restaurant," English said, which prompted one guest to quip, "Maybe this time around, it'll be Mark Zuckerberg."

Hats Off

Spoiler alert: I was one of the judges of the hat contest.

That doesn't change the fact that the Rose Garden Party, held in the spectacularly beautiful Kelleher Rose Garden in the Back Bay Fens, is one of the summer's hottest parties.

Hosted by First Lady Angela Menino and Parks Commissioner Antonia Pollak to raise money for ParkArts, the evening attracted a strictly A-list crowd that included Aquarium chief Bud Ris, the ubiquitous Frank Wisneski and his gorgeous wife, Lynn Dale, blonde bombshell Connie Brown, dapper arts benefactor Bill Nigreen, the breathtaking Grayson Moore and her mother, the right Rev. Helen Miller Moore, the flawless Mary Hines, the jewel-like Elisha Daniels, the soie elegant Maggie Ahearn, the unsinkable Molly Dunne, madcap fashion designer Sara Campbell, BCA head honcha Veronique LeMelle and BSO bigwig Kim Noltemy, not to mention my fellow hat judges, artistes extraordinaire Marie Galvin and Kathleen McDermott.

The categories included just for men (which I naturally deserved), most elegant, best garden party, most creative and (new category) best fascinator.

It doesn't matter who won, because everyone looked splendid (and I didn't win), but a mere sample of the witty repartee was this exchange:

"My handwriting degenerated when I needed glasses."

"Really? Mine did when I started drinking in the morning."

However, the funniest remark, while, granted, an obvious one, was, "Does this hat make my ass look big?" ×××

Avez-vous dish? Dirt? A spectacular social occasion? Call J.S. at 617-859-1400, ext. 303, or send an e-mail to jonathan@improper.com.

Evolution Rock

The news that Snoop Dogg hung up his pimp hat, swapped rap for reggae and changed his name to Snoop Lion isn't, on second thought, fantastically weird. In recent headlines, it's not even on par with the Olympic badminton scandal. But Mr. Lion is living proof that a man's taste in music, like the droop of his cheek or the audacity of his nose hair, changes with age.

Adam DeTour

Consider your favorite records from childhood. The lyrics are inane, the melodies singsong and the pitch squeaky. "Call Me Maybe" is the ideal song if you're trying to impress a three-year-old. Moving up the growth chart, frat boys respond to the apish whump of LMFAO. Retirees in pantsuits like to be reminded of their wilted sexual bloom, so they go to Tom Jones concerts. And magazine editors? We just stick our fingers in our ears and make la-la-la noises.

But it isn't just your stage of brain development that shapes your playlist. Upon request, I once belted out several verses of "Barrett's Privateers" to an assembly of Masai tribespersons. They listened politely, but I could tell they would've preferred ululating throat trills. People enjoy what's familiar. Which shouldn't preclude you from catching the 10 local musicians and bands featured in Paul Robicheau's annual roundup of hot acts to follow.

WORLD ON A STRING

AS A FLAMENCO guitar star from Minnesota and "usually the only guy in the nail care aisle," Jonathan "Juanito" Pascual, 39, is used to standing out. After high school, he lived in Spain, earning money by playing on the subway and learning his craft at flamenco studios. "The older players wouldn't look at me," Pascual says. "But one day they heard me playing the blues, and within a week, half a dozen guys were like, 'Hey, man. You wanna play together?'" Now based in Belmont, Pascual's style blends the classic Spanish sound with American elements of rock and jazz. Success has him booking gigs around the world, from Carnegie Hall to a Prairie Home Companion cruise. On Nov. 3, he appears with his New Flamenco Trio at Somerville Theatre. "It's what I've been working toward since I was a teenager," says Pascual. "It's the power trios of Hendrix and Cream, but through the lens of flamenco." NICK ALTSCHULER

Good Eats

Wicked 'Wiches

When Andrea Hasselbacher started scooping ice cream at age 16, she didn't know she had taken the first step on a delectable career path. Decades (and a pharmacy degree) later, she's the proprietor of Beakers & Cream, a small-batch ice cream sandwich operation she runs out of the kitchen at Union Square's Journeyman. On Tuesdays, when the restaurant is closed, she bakes and churns, then packs thick slabs of dense, ultra-rich ice cream between a variety of cookies. The results are masterpieces like mascarpone mixed with vodka-soaked blueberries and walnut crumble stuck in the middle of snickerdoodles. More flavors, like ricotta bookended by pistachio, and maple-bourbon between peanut butter, will have you swooning all summer. ELIZABETH BOMZE

Tress Management

Combining Nicki Minaj pink, Ryan Seacrest–style puns and starlet-chic coiffs, Blo is changing blow drys in Boston. The original North American blow-dry bar just opened its first Massachusetts outpost in the South End, complete with the chain's signature sassy, bubblegum aesthetic and kicky lingo (termed, naturally, "blocabulary"). Services like extensions and a mens-only Blo Bro are options, but the no-cut, no-color business' biggest draw is its signature menu of seven 45-minute blow-out styles, each costing just $35. Pick between down 'dos like the Executive Sweet ("skyscraper straight") and Sex, Hugs and Rock & Roll (tousled curls), or opt for a classic bun, boho braid or high-volume ponytail. Appointments are easy to secure over the phone or online, and hours starting at 7 am ensure Blo can tame tresses for any-o'clock. LINDSEY CANANT

LUCKY IN LOVE

TO BEN DOLGOFF: Luckiest girl in Boston? I think so. One year ago I was perusing The Improper for the first time and saw a bachelor whom I couldn't stop thinking about. You turned my world upside down when you responded to my random love letter on Facebook. Here's a happy anniversary to the kindest, sexiest, most fun-loving guy around, and thank you for giving me a shot! Remember, everything happens for a reason, and our love proves it. JL

To the kind gentleman on Revere Street in Beacon Hill around 9 am on Friday, July 13:

Like any good Bostonian, I was a bit worried when you got out of your black truck to come talk to me when we were stopped. I was already anxious because I was taking three out-of-town guests to catch a bus and was afraid I'd make them late. You told me that a cop was giving out tickets for turning off Storrow—which I didn't even realize was illegal—and gave me a chance to divert and get to our destination in the nick of time. But in the midst all of my worries, I forgot to thank you for your thoughtful, kind gesture—which saved me time, money and embarrassment. You were a godsend and dissipated all bad luck on Friday the 13th. Wishing you many more blessings in return.

A grateful girl

HOPS TO IT

When the Finale in Coolidge Corner closed its doors last New Year's Eve, it was brushed off as another casualty of the economy. But where some saw abjection, Darren Tow and David Ng, owners of Coolidge Corner Wine & Spirits just two doors down, saw possibility. "It was about five years ago that we first thought about opening a restaurant," says Tow, a Brookline native. On Aug. 8, that thought comes to fruition as Hops N Scotch, the team's latest business venture, opens in the old Finale space.

True to its name, the "gastrolounge" features a variety of craft beers (read: West Coast IPAs and local favorites like Backlash and Harpoon), with 10 of its 40 taps in rotation. As for the liquor menu, the choice of 80 Scotches and pages of whiskeys and bourbons will have you quoting Anchorman.

A CHOICE OF 80 SCOTCHES AND PAGES OF WHISKEYS

In the back of the house, chef de cuisine Clinton Cox, formerly of East by Northeast, plates comfort food. His menu features Southern favorites and a few inventive fusions. The Scotch eggs, for instance, are soft-boiled, wrapped in house-made chorizo, then breaded, fried and served with a runny center and a bourbon-mustard sauce. Also look for classic fried chicken—buttermilk-battered with a side of cheesy grits and sautéed collards.

Though they've been developing the concept for years, Tow says that he and Ng will continue to listen to feedback and tailor the restaurant to the community. "I think that's natural for us," says Tow. "The last thing we want to do is disappoint anybody. We customize it all."

He adds, "A lot of the beers you see on tap, it's because someone asked for it." True Southern hospitality.

Q&A

MAKE 'EM LAUGH

Comedian Joe Wong, of Joe Biden–roasting fame, performs his Chinese Comedy Made in the USA show, in Mandarin, at ImprovBoston on Aug. 21.

Are people ever afraid to laugh at your jokes?
No. I never had that feeling. When I'm in San Francisco, the audience is 80–90 percent Asians. And then I'd travel to Denver, and every audience member is white. I can still do the same routine and get a similar response. Deep down, funny is funny.

What does it mean to be Chinese-American?
I'm a U.S. citizen now, and it's a mix of feelings. When I first got here, I described myself as a rosy-eyed immigrant. After getting my degree and holding a job and having traveled here, I noticed that there's the other side of America, like the prejudice and stereotypes. But America is still a hopeful country.

Do you feel an obligation to discuss the immigrant experience in your routine?
Yeah, and more and more so. In the beginning I just wanted to be a comedian and tell jokes. And then some immigrants said to me that they appreciate that I'm telling a story that's similar to theirs. Even though I thought those stories are very unique to immigrants, the general public is interested in them, too, because it's part of the American life.

What's the difference between performing in Mandarin and performing in English?
In the sense of the type of story I tell, it's very similar. I can probably use 70 percent of the jokes from my English routine and roughly translate that into Chinese and have it still work. But others, like I might make fun of my hometown, those are purely Chinese. I think deep down people's senses of humor are very similar.

How was it roasting Joe Biden?
He's a really good, decent guy. My opening line was basically just making fun of the fact that I'm really obscure, that everybody goes, "Who?" when they brought me up. After the show, Joe Biden comes up to me and says, "Hey, Joe, when you become really, really big and famous, if I go visit you, and your people tell you it's Joe Biden at the door, just please don't say, "Who?" HANNAH LOTT-SCHWARTZ

Smart Food

Frustrated by the lack of appealing, wheat-free breakfast options, Sara Gragnolati turned her gluten intolerance (and a Babson MBA) into Cocomama, a Boston-based line of hot quinoa cereal. It's more convenient than oatmeal, as it comes fully cooked in microwaveable pouches for easy reheating. And it's arguably tastier, appearing in banana-cinnamon, honey-almond, cranberry-orange and wild blueberry varieties. Mixed with coconut cream and real fruit, the table is set for gluten-free gluttony. ELIZABETH BOMZE

SPANISH STARS

As the names may be unfamiliar and the varieties obscure, Spanish wine can be hard to grasp. But it's well worth the effort. Remember, this is the homeland of garnacha, otherwise known as grenache on the other side of the Pyrenees. Done well, it's probably the world's most underrated red varietal. To be sure, the country with the largest grapevine acreage in the world turns out an ocean of plonk. But when she's good, she is very, very good.

In a recent blind tasting of moderately priced reds, I came away with a number of strong impressions. Direct and sensual (with intensity somewhere between pinot noir and cabernet), the following winners are anytime wines, versatile with food or intriguing enough to quaff on their own.

MASTER OF WINE SANDY BLOCK IS VICE PRESIDENT OF BEVERAGE OPERATIONS FOR LEGAL SEA FOODS

✳ Tarima Monastrell Alicante, 2010 ($10, Cambridge Wine & Spirits) The spot where these grapes are grown is inland at a high desert elevation. Monastrell, otherwise known as mourvèdre, is a variety that produces powerhouse wines with a wild, gamey edge. Not this baby. It has a ripe, blueberry freshness balanced with hints of vanilla, leather and oak notes. Mellow and a bit tart on the palate, it has a berry taste that lingers. Serve this at your next dinner party and astound your friends with the price.

✳ Los Dos Campo de Borja, 2010 ($8, Liquor World) Given the low cost, wines from the mountainous Campo de Borja region deliver amazing results. This one is a 50/50 blend of garnacha and syrah with a creamy texture upfront. Fragrant with ripe cherry, chocolate, lavender and toast, the wine has a taste that's almost sweet, with coffee and herb accents. This unoaked blend is a real find.

✳ Muga Reserva Rioja, 2007 ($33, Federal Wine & Spirits) Rioja is the aristocrat of Spanish reds, but many wines from this region are coasting. Not Muga. Even with 30 months in wood, it tastes fresh and savory, the slightly rustic, earthy notes enveloped in a delicious stew of cooked cherry, herbs and minerals. This is a wine you can age, or enjoy a bottle now with swordfish with a tapenade.

Drink of the Moment

STRIP EASE

NAME: Ginger Britton

PRICE: $11

INGREDIENTS: Eagle Rare Bourbon, mint-and-ginger-infused syrup, Fee Brothers Peach Bitters.

GINGER BRITTON
Scollay Square
21 Beacon St., Boston
(617-742-4900)
scollaysquare.com

REINVENTOR: Head bartender Brian Goodwin "fell in love" with the original iteration of the cocktail while sitting at the bar of the Bourbon House in New Orleans. He updated it by swapping peach for orange bitters and replacing muddled mint and ginger with the house-infused syrup.

FELL IN LOVE?: Yes. The drink's named after a 1920s burlesque dancer, which fits in nicely with the Prohibition-era feel of Scollay Square.

REMINISCENT OF: A defanged mint julep. Eagle Rare is a smooth whiskey, and the peach and syrup cushion the alcohol's force. Only at the end does the mint clip through the sweetness. "I wanted something everyone could enjoy," says Goodwin.

FOR BOURBON-HATERS: Try the Gingersmith, with apple-ginger vodka, mint, lime and orange bitters. "I love vodka," says Goodwin.

"It's a blank easel to work with."

PAIR IT WITH: Something rich and smoky, like New Orleans barbecued shrimp, or with a nip of spice, like blackened day boat scallops with horseradish marmalade.

WHEN IN ROME

And the Harvard Square Renaissance

JUST ABOUT EVERYBODY likes Italian food, and, of course, who doesn't love free parking? Those are just two of the selling points the Aquitaine Group is relying on with its seventh restaurant, Cinquecento, set to open in the old Rocca space in late September.

"We want Cinquecento to be the South End's neighborhood trattoria," says Christoper Glionna, the restaurant's managing partner and the group's director of operations. "In Rome, the trattoria is the center of neighborhood life." To that end, prices will be reasonable, with apps from $7–$10 and pastas and entrees from $14–$24. Dishes, prepared by chef de cuisine Justin Winters, formerly of Sorellina, will include grilled swordfish with taggiasca olive marmalata and fregola sarda insalata.

Also appealing is the 100-bottle Italian wine list, with reds and whites by the glass, carafe or quartino, which is "not quite two glasses," according to Glionna.

MING TSAI'S BLUE DRAGON may be the most recently announced addition to the Seaport, but it certainly won't be the last. In fact, says Tsai, "I know at least two good new restaurants going in. The more, the merrier."

Meanwhile, back in Wellesley, Blue Ginger is reaping the benefits of a partnership with the nearby Massachusetts Horticultural Society, which is growing a panoply of herbs and greens for the restaurant: shiso, tatsoi, mizuna and more. "In return, I promote what they're doing," Ming says. "It's a nice, symbiotic relationship."

BEACON HILL MAINSTAY Toscano plans to open a second location in Harvard Square by the end of the year. "It will be the same size, very similar in style and concept," says co-owner Richard Caccia-grani. "Harvard Square is coming back again."

EXAMINING NORMAL

How biology shapes our minds

THE DIAGNOSTIC MANUAL therapists use defines "abnormal" with hard-set borders. But Jordon Smoller argues that the spectrum of normal-to-abnormal is less a series of boxes than a long, continuous ribbon. The author explores genes, hormones and conditioning, all of which sculpt our fate, and he describes the brain as, "written in plastic, not stone."

Smoller looks at psychological and neurological studies on the reasons for shyness, sexual attraction (calling it "reward circuitry"), and the explosion of autism and its possible overdiagnosis. Whether traumas are caused by maternal neglect, abuse or war, the sufferers may be shaped by disaster, or strengthened into helpful self-sufficiency. Using the example of a Holocaust survivor, he illustrates the dramatic side of neuroplasticity and resilience. Smoller also explores how drugs and treatments may lessen or even delete traumatic memories.

The Other Side Of Normal
by Jordon Smoller

Smoller is associate vice chair of the MGH department of psychiatry.

One of Smoller's thoroughly abnormal case studies is psychopathic murderer Ted Bundy, who bragged, "I'm in the enviable position of not having to deal with guilt." People with borderline personality disorder—volatile, needy and rejecting—may have had both unstable parenting and hypersensitive limbic responses. These are just some of the darker parts of Smoller's fascinating picture of our mysterious inner and outer influences. ×××

FROM PAGE 187: "Made from a string of just nine amino acids, oxytocin helps the mother push out the baby, gets the breast milk flowing, and makes the mother's brain see the squirming, crying infant as a bundle of joy. As the due date draws near, a series of chemical brakes come off the mother's pituitary gland, allowing it to make increasing amounts of oxytocin, which are released in pulses into her bloodstream."

A CELEBRATION OF BELGIAN BEER

Best of Belgium

Belgium is renowned for its vibrant and diverse beer culture. A rich tradition of culinary invention and improvisation, combined with centuries of brewing passion and expertise, helped craft a stunning variety of beer styles enjoyed around the world.

Leffe Blonde was first brewed in 1240 by the monks of Abbaye de Notre Dame de Leffe in Belgium. A spicy, faintly clove-like aroma is balanced by Leffe's creamy body and restrained dry finish.

Stella Artois' rich brewing heritage dates back to 1366 in Leuven, Belgium, where it was first brewed to celebrate the holiday season. Traditional malted barley and the highest quality European hops give Stella Artois its full flavor and delicately crisp finish.

Hoegaarden is the Original Belgian Wheat Beer, dating back to the 15th Century. A naturally cloudy beer, Hoegaarden features a secret to its refreshing flavor and spicy nose: real Curaçao orange peel and a dash of coriander.

Always Enjoy Responsibly.

GOING DUTCH

In Aruba, the cuisine draws crowds as much as the weather.

POOLING RESOURCES The Marriott's pool provides back-up should the beach get too crowded.

SUN-DEPRIVED RESIDENTS of the Commonwealth make up a large percentage of Aruba's visitors, and it's easy to see why. In less time than it takes to fly from Logan to LAX, you can jet to the former Dutch colony, where thermometers are locked in the 80s year-round thanks to its location outside of the hurricane belt. Honeymooners love the adults-only resorts where they can dine on white-sand beaches while admiring Rothko sunsets; families appreciate the all-inclusive hotels with meals and activities designed to keep tykes entertained; and seniors enjoy the idea of an exotic vacation without forgoing the amenities of home and grappling with another language. But Aruba is more than a convenient paradise. It also boasts some of the best cuisine in the Caribbean due to its multiethnic population, proximity to South America (Venezuela is a mere 17 miles away) and penchant for spice.

✓ Traveler's Checks

Most Aruban businesses take U.S. dollars in addition to florins, so don't bother to exchange currency while you're there.

Aruba's customs process is notoriously long. Be prepared to wait two hours or more in M.C. Escher–style lines that mysteriously disappear or diverge.

Base your culinary tour at the Aruba Marriott Resort & Stellaris Casino. This sprawling property set on one end of Palm Beach underwent a $50 million makeover in 2009, which saw the construction of the Tradewinds Club, an adults-only floor with upgraded amenities, including its own beach area, food-stocked lounge and evening open bar. Even if you're not on the Tradewinds level, you can still take advantage of the 100-square-foot balconies (the largest on the island), and any guest over the age of 18 can access the H2Oasis pool with its private gazebos. Although you can spend your whole vacation on-premises, snacking on fish tacos on the beach or bellying up to the buffet at the Italian-leaning La Vista, more adventurous and authentic dining is a short car ride away at Zeerover.

An island gem in the fishing town of Savaneta, Zeerover (the Dutch word for "pirate" or "sea-rover") serves only shrimp and the fish of the day, easily deduced from the haul carted from the boats tied at its dock. You might get mahi-mahi steaks, lightly seasoned and fried, mounded over French fries and plantains and accompanied by pan bati, a cross between a pancake and corn bread, and house-made pica de papaya, an Aruban hotsauce consisting of spicy peppers and papaya. Washed down with a bottle of Balashi, the island's light beer—with the sounds of men playing dominos and billiards in the background—the meal satisfies in its simplicity.

For cooking that showcases Aruba's modernity, check out White Modern Cuisine, located a short walk from the Marriott in the Palm Beach Plaza Mall. Chef/owner Urvin Croes skillfully incorporates his multicultural background, European training and El Bulli–inspired techniques in his deconstructed dishes, all of which are listed in quotation marks on the menu. Thankfully the punctuation doesn't portend pretentiousness, because offerings, like "wonton soup" or "pan-fried duck," not only look beautiful, but also combine novel textures and tastes that draw from familiar components.

Somewhere in the middle of the spectrum between basic and elaborate resides Papiamento, a romantic restaurant famed for its lush garden and antiques. Located in the capital of Oranjestad, the Ellis family's eatery has been serving Aruban cuisine for 20 years, and is a dining destination for the Queen of Holland and her family on their visits to the island. Order the keshi yena, a traditional dish made with chicken tossed with a dozen herbs and spices and baked in Gouda, or anything from the hot-stone section of the menu, where options like lobster or beef filet finish cooking over a sizzling stone, tableside.

Whether you prefer to dine among locals, foodies or European royalty, one of the 150 destinations on this culinary island will certainly meet your tastes. ✖✖✖

ROYAL FAMILY

The former King Fung owners return to their old neighborhood.

60 Beach St., Boston
(617-542-1763)

MEAT UP China King's beef hot pot matches its handmade noodles and dumplings for homey comfort food.

BEFORE GUCHI DREAMT UP his midnight ramen, before Phillip Tang concocted his pork-belly baos at East by Northeast, Doris and Erwin Mei's handmade noodles and dumplings drew the likes of Julia Child to their Chinatown hole-in-the-wall, King Fung. In 2008, they sold their business to launch King Fung II in Brookline, but last March the Meis returned to their old haunts to open China King. Located a couple blocks from the Chinatown gate, the restaurant's prices and portions are generous, even by the neighborhood's standards. Seven-dollar plates of slick noodles can easily feed two. Scallion pies ($3.95) are as hefty as stuffed envelopes. It's family-style, alcohol-sopping food that's large on heart, but not so healthy for that particular organ.

The most expensive and popular item isn't technically on the menu. The banquet-worthy Peking duck ($38) requires a day's notice. Prepared with a recipe handed down by an uncle from northern China, the Meis' duck was scalded with a hot-water-and-honey mixture and hung to dry overnight to ensure a crisp, mahogany skin when roasted. An hour before our reservation, they started handmaking the pancakes to go with the first, and best, of the three courses. After a tableside presentation—an opportunity many diners use for photographs—the duck was spirited back to the kitchen where it was deboned and disassembled. Smeared with hoisin sauce, topped with scallions and rolled in a warm, chewy pancake, the honeyed meat and potato-chip-brittle skin yielded decadent, savory mouthfuls. Unfortunately, this made the subsequent dishes a slight letdown. The second course was a choice between chow mein or a salad of sprouts and carrots, and the third was a basin of duck soup with Napa cabbage. Either way, the delicious parts of the bird had already been served. We found spare shreds of meat in both the noodles and the salad, while bones weighted down the soup.

My favorite dish was less dramatic—the rice cake with pork and pickled cabbage ($7.50). Discs of airy noodles were transformed by the salty-sour combination of meat and preserved vegetables. Similarly delicate was the chow fun with beef ($7.50), tissue-thin sheets of noodles with a stroganoff-like topping of melting meat and bell peppers. Chow mein ($6.95–$7.50) was more like a chewy udon, thick tendrils dripping with sauce; it was a good iteration of a Chinese-American standby, elevated when accompanied by pickled cabbage. Raviolis and dumplings ($6.95 each) were juicy but otherwise unmemorable. If you order them, bypass the doughy, boiled dumplings for the fried version, which gained texture from a light sear. The hot pot ($15.95) with beef and vegetables arrived in a clay cauldron bubbling with hunks of brisket, carrots and turnips softened by a long stew. Its broth had a fragrant, nuanced flavor more redolent of a consommé. Shrimp with spicy sauce ($9.95) proved aptly named, with red pepper flecking the onions and shellfish, but a heavy hand with the brown sauce overwhelmed the miniscule shrimp.

Despite seating only 24, the restaurant is large in spirit—the kind of place that draws groups for the generosity of its portions as well as the gregariousness of its owners. Doris still juliennes carrots in the back when she's not greeting customers by name, and her husband and brother divide duties in the kitchen. A son, aged 8 when he first worked at King Fung, is now 16 and deftly relays orders. The atmosphere feels like a remnant of an earlier era of Americanized Chinese cuisine.

A few doors down, the China Pearl team just opened a "pan-Asian tapas" restaurant, Shojo, with graffiti-ed walls and craft cocktails. China King belongs to an older Chinatown, when the approach was simple, the prices minimal and the plates were mountainous. ✖✖✖

Movies { SEAN BURNS }

WELL EXECUTED

Matthew McConaughey transforms from heartthrob to hit man.

Killer Joe ★★★★
Starring Matthew McConaughey, Emile Hirsch, Juno Temple, Thomas Haden Church and Gina Gershon. Screenplay by Tracy Letts, based on his stage play. Directed by William Friedkin. At Boston Common and Kendall Square.

AS GOD IS MY WITNESS, I'll never make fun of Matthew McConaughey again.

After almost 20 years of squandered promise and more shirtless himbo roles than I care to count, the drawling good-time bongo enthusiast has improbably become 2012's comeback kid. McConaughey's scene-stealing supporting turn in Magic Mike was some masterful sleight of hand, as he grandiosely played up his pinup persona as a calculated cover for deeper currents we hadn't really seen before. But Killer Joe is something else altogether. It's the full-scale obliteration of an image, subverting McConaughey's star charisma for such nefarious purposes that the character already feels iconic.

I'm still shocked this movie even exists. Director William Friedkin's NC-17 adaptation of Tracy Letts' 1993 play is a go-for-broke outrage. It's visceral and sadistic, yet has a fiendish sense of humor about its fundamental depravity. The movie is plain wrong on so many levels, and I loved every minute of it.

A Texas trailer-trash tragicomedy with an air of divine retribution, Letts' story takes place in a moral sewer. Two-bit coke dealer Chris Smith (Emile Hirsch) finds himself deep in debt to some very dangerous people after his deadbeat mom absconds with a couple of his ounces. Chris' slow-witted, drunkard father (Thomas Haden Church) can't offer much help. He's too busy trying to keep tabs on his feral second wife (Gina Gershon), who doesn't see why it's such a big deal that she answers the front door bottomless. The fearless Gershon's jaw-dropping entrance serves as Friedkin's statement of purpose. He's announcing in the opening moments that all bets are off, kids.

It's visceral and sadistic, yet has a fiendish sense of humor about its fundamental depravity.

The only way out for Chris is his mother's insurance policy, which bequeaths a fair amount of money to his possibly brain-damaged sister, Dottie (Juno Temple). Enter the local legend named Killer Joe Cooper, a police detective who does a little wet-work on the side for fun and profit.

Dressed in all black and slowing his movements down to a feline crawl, McConaughey's Killer Joe dominates the picture the minute he walks through the door. He carries himself with a peculiar, finicky elegance that immediately sets him above the cast of yammering hayseeds. There's a sleepy-eyed menace to the performance that recalls Robert Mitchum in the way every pause is freighted with the potential for violence.

Of course, the Smiths are sorely lacking any front money for their intended matricide, so Joe accepts deferred payment in the form of "a retainer." That retainer happens to be Dottie's virginity.

If you're thinking that any family who'd pimp out their daughter in an effort to murder their mother deserves every horrible thing they have coming, you're probably right. An undeniably satisfying feeling is created, as the movie works simply by presenting McConaughey as an unholy avenger, psychologically tearing the Smiths apart and forcing them to confront their transgressions.

But what makes Killer Joe so audacious is how brazenly Friedkin and Letts muck with audience expectations, shoving that very bloodlust back in our faces, as if they're taunting us. So you think this is what you want to see? Are you sure? Are you really sure?

Friedkin has been doing this kind of thing for over 40 years. The French Connection, The Exorcist and To Live and Die in L.A. are brutal exercises expertly designed to work over crowds. His movies make you queasy. He's got a rare command of jagged cuts, and few filmmakers employ sound design to such unsettling effect. All the barking dogs and blaring TVs in Killer Joe provide a constant aural distress signal that bleeds in from outside the frame.

Sure, he had a rough couple of decades, with forgotten thrillers like Rules of Engagement and The Hunted. Friedkin's ugly, punitive proclivities are ill-suited to the assembly-line, would-be blockbusters he was assigned to direct. But redemption arrived when he broke away from the major studios and discovered Letts. Friedkin returned to form with an adaptation of Letts' Bug, a harrowing, two-character play that became an almost unbearably visceral 2006 indie starring Michael Shannon and a revelatory Ashley Judd. I fondly recall watching an opening night audience streaming for the exits at the 30-minute mark.

And now, less than a month shy of his 77th birthday, Friedkin's unleashed the wickedest provocation of his career. The final act of Killer Joe is so monstrous, hideously funny and deeply unnerving that I still can't believe what I saw.

All I know is that I'll never look at fried chicken the same way again. ×××

HIGHER GROUND

THE RYAN MONTBLEAU Band has established itself as a sturdy outfit that serves feel-good funk and R&B-rooted rock at about 150 shows a year. The music is well suited for club, cruise and festival fans who like to groove and shake.

"Sometimes I run head-on with that, and it kinda bothers me," says singer/guitarist Montbleau, 35. "Sometimes I don't feel like throwing the dance party. I just want to be listened to."

He should earn that more focused attention with For Higher. On this new album—which he recorded with New Orleans studio aces instead of his 10-year-old band—he centers on classic soul.

Montbleau had written songs for Trombone Shorty's last two albums, produced by Galactic sax and harmonica player Ben Ellman. In turn, Ellman encouraged him to come cut his own record and assembled an all-star crew to accompany Montbleau: bassist George Porter Jr. (from the Meters), keyboardist Ivan Neville, guitarist Anders Osborne and drummer Simon Lott.

"The idea was 'Why don't I write tunes for myself and see what Ben could do with them?' But I didn't know it was going to be those guys!" the Peabody native says. "It definitely took me out of my comfort zone. I'd be lying if I said I wasn't nervous going into it, mainly because of the material. I didn't know what to bring in."

> "One lesson that I've finally come to learn is that you can't hold on too tight."

He needn't have worried. While Montbleau only started singing during his last semester at Villanova University, the album's tracks showcase Montbleau as a pure vocalist. In addition to its six fine originals, For Higher features four covers, kicking off with Eddie Hinton's breezy soul gem "Yeah Man" and Bill Withers' "Heartbreak Road."

"One lesson that I've finally come to learn is that you can't hold on too tight," says Montbleau, whose studio experience includes three albums recorded with his band as well as three solo outings. "As much as you want to try to make it perfect, some of the best stuff is the looser stuff. It was helpful to not have a complete vision of what the record was going to be. I mainly knew I had to sing my guts out."

However, one of the most impressive qualities of For Higher is that Montbleau doesn't push too hard. Instead, he sings with a laid-back but invested tone. It serves both his strengths and the songs, including Curtis Mayfield's junkie lament "Here but I'm Gone," which Montbleau inhabits with a conversational edge.

"In the past, I've had a tendency to oversing a lot of things, with a lot of tension," says Montbleau, crediting a Boston opera singer for teaching him how to ease up. "I've learned to relax."

Any nerves about recording cold with New Orleans studio legends were likewise calmed, evidenced by the buoyant countdown to a spacey blues take on Rhinoceros' "Sweet, Nice 'n' High."

"Every single guy was very nice and supportive of the music," Montbleau says. "They were listening to every playback and slapping high fives."

Montbleau's bandmates—keyboardist Jason Cohen, guitarist Lyle Brewer, bassist Matt Giannaros, drummer James Cohen and percussionist Yahuba—also proved supportive.

"They said, 'This just helps what we do,'" he recalls. "Everyone's a true musician, and all we've done is want to get better for 10 years. They were psyched to listen to the parts because some of these songs we've already been playing."

So expect some extra soul when the Ryan Montbleau Band hits late-summer festivals, including Naukabout in East Falmouth on Aug. 11, Redhook Fest in Portsmouth, N.H., on Aug. 18, Bread & Roses Heritage Festival in Lawrence on Sept. 3 and Life Is Good Festival in Canton on Sept. 22.

"It's great now to get to play the bigger [festivals]," says Montbleau, who used to work the box office at Boston's original House of Blues. "Everything has been a slow build."

Though not for lack of effort. Montbleau's band embraces streaming live shows for free and then posting them online for an optional fee. "That's what we built our whole career on," he says, "to get the music out there." ×××

Discovering the particular charms of Revere Beach

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

THE PATH TO THE BEACH where I swam as a child had a gate for blocking unwanted visitors. Heaven forbid one's cows wander onto the neighbor's field. On the secluded shoreline, pale families kept their old New England distance, staying outside of earshot or the radius of an errant Frisbee.

Now, like many Bostonians, a day on the beach involves a drive to the Cape, and a stop at the gate means a $15 charge to park on roiling tarmac alongside a sea of burned and boisterous vacationers.

There's another option, but whenever the suggestion floats up, it's followed by jokes about hypodermic needles or a concern over mugging. Established as the country's first public beach in 1896, Revere Beach has fallen from its apex. Long gone are the rides and ballrooms. In their place stretches a boardwalk of shacks and dives. When discussing Revere Beach, the subject of swimming never crosses people's minds. When I mentioned my girlfriend and I were making the trip, most people assumed we were grabbing lunch at Kelly's Roast Beef. But after a 15-minute journey, the doors of the Blue Line opened, and the drifting scent of tanning oil confirmed we had arrived at an active seashore.

The scene is distinct. In Wellfleet, a nearby sunbather may point out a seal playing in the waves. Here, a bedraggled gentleman extolled the virtues of a passing El Dorado. At the same time, while Cape beaches are littered with crumbling castles built by future geometry-class failures, in Revere, the sandsculpting festival produced towering works, including a monument to Fenway Park complete with reliefs of retired players. Time had eroded Jackie Robinson's nose, but he still stared out, majestic as the sphinx.

We spread our blanket by a volleyball tournament sponsored by El Planeta, and Latin dance hits added a backing track to our view of the ocean. The waves rolled in carrying a plastic bag or two, but the sand, I assure you, was free of biological waste. The ideas expressed on that sand, however, weren't always so pristine.

"Are you guys Spanish?" inquired a paunchy Caucasian woman, her glistening sweat allowing her Patriots tattoo to really pop in the sunlight.

The sand, I assure you, was free of biological waste.

We said we weren't. "Good," she replied. "No… I mean, I'm not alone now." She was soon thereafter.

Revere Beach will throw you in the deep end of diversity, but it's not merely a matter of nationality. Tattoos came in greater variation than skin tones. The removal of a shirt reveals more than the vanilla tramp stamp, as backs provided canvases for massive angel wings or a mural of DC Comics' greatest heroes. Men's bathing suits stretched from gym shorts to board shorts to vacuum-sealed boy shorts. A volleyball referee worked a Speedo so small it could, appropriately, be carried in a coin purse, with room left over for T fare.

An idiosyncrasy we discovered while walking to a boardwalk bar was that you're just as likely to find sunbathers across the street from the beach as you are on the shore. Camped out by a public restroom were four graying men, their hides slowly curing, their chairs facing away from the water. From their conversation—"I rolled in from Lowell at 1:45." "Yeah, I woke up on my couch at 9:30 this morning."—it was clear they were either loving retirement or continuing down a career path one wouldn't deem traditional.

It was at the Shipwreck Lounge that Revere Beach truly seduced me. There were '70s tunes, racing forms, snapshots of the owner with celebrities (Pacino, Pesci, various Sopranos, Gene Wilder), and not one but two old-timers with canes. It's everything I could want in a dive, complete with a Saturday buffet. In the parking lot, there was a man with a grill stacked with meats and a bikini calendar full of reminders. He served me an Italian sausage and pointed to the condiments. "You want mustard or any of this crap?" I had to restrain myself from hugging him.

An hour later, we stopped at a different bar. As I ordered, a man with a shattered incisor walked up and spun a yarn. Turns out he'd had a vodka-fueled trip to Foxwoods with some Polish gangsters, one of whom found out the hard way he has an allergy to amaretto. Then, studying us with pupils the size of pinheads, he announced he was going to play us a song. Before we left, I overheard him talking to the jukebox about Vladimir Putin.

Seems things turn slightly stranger as the shadows grow long on Revere Beach. Taking one last stroll down the boardwalk, we passed a man walking an iguana and a woman pushing a dog in a baby carriage. We witnessed happy moments, like a busload of dolled-up teens arriving for quinceañera photos. It's just that they happened to unload in front of two men being patted down for drug possession.

So go to Revere Beach. According to today's Mass. Department of Conservation and Recreation's hotline, the water's fine. But consider packing up before the sun goes down. ✖✖✖

JUST SAYIN'

Internet lingo makes dummies of us all.

WHEN I WAS IN sixth grade, one of my classmates got his hands on a copy of Eddie Murphy Raw, in which Murphy imagines Bill Cosby paraphrasing his act as, "Filth flarn filth!" Within a day, every boy in the class was constantly yelling, "Filth flarn! Flarn filth!" I had no idea who Eddie Murphy was, but that didn't matter—this new phrase sounded kind of funny and everyone was saying it. Thus, so did I. The abrupt mass adoption of slang was such a common grade-school phenomenon that I never thought much about it, but I'm sure my parents wondered what the hell was going on when I'd come home from school yelling, "Hot tub! Too hot! Gonna burn myself!" Eddie Murphy was a major cultural influence on little white kids in 1980s Maine.

Kids are constantly picking up linguistic quirks en masse, as nobody wants to be left on the sidelines sounding like a baffled foreign exchange student. But at some point, we outgrow this habit, becoming self-aware enough to know when we sound like idiots. At least, that's what used to happen.

Now, thanks to our electronic tethers, the classroom hive-mind extends to adulthood.

Parsing Craigslist ads has made me fearful for the future of our society.

And the problem isn't just that we sound like dummies. It's that we all sound like the same dummy. The echo chamber of the Internet has reduced us all to a bunch of sixth-graders yelling, "Flarn filth!"

I realize this makes me sound like an irritable 95-year-old complaining that the rock 'n' roll music will be the death of us all, but I find it depressing when our colorful tapestry of individually expressed emotions unravels into the gray fog of a million people writing "Just sayin'." I can't stand "Just sayin'." More than the fact that uttering it makes you sound like a smarmy bore, it makes you indistinguishable from every other smarmy bore on your Facebook feed. We're crowdsourcing language, as evidenced by the fact that I just used the word "crowd-sourcing."

"Full stop" is another suddenly popular phrase that's popping up online and in my inbox. It's basically shorthand for, "I wish to start an argument over the aforementioned point, and my opinions are deeply held and inflexible." I'm sick of that phrase because it is the most obnoxious way to end a paragraph. Full stop.

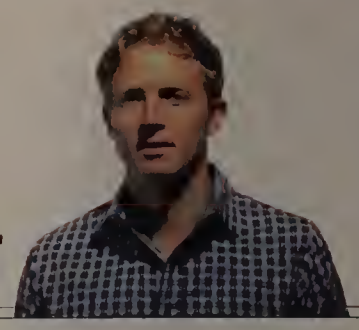
Besides specific phrases, there are certain gimmicks that were possibly once clever but have been blunted by the endless online repetition. For instance, before you post a status update proclaiming that you and an inanimate object need to have a talk—i.e., "OK, MacBook Pro with retina display, you and I need to have a talk"—consider that you're the 10 millionth person to use that particular rhetorical device so far this morning. Maybe only the nine millionth, if you write that you need to have a talk.

If you really want to plumb the depths of human discourse, spend a little time on Craigslist. I've been looking for an old truck, and a few weeks parsing Craigslist ads has made me fearful for the future of our society. For one thing, the word "probably" is evidently far too cumbersome for us busy modern Americans, hence its replacement with the more facile "prolly." As in, "As I sit here composing this Craigslist ad for my 1995 F-250, I'm prolly drunk."

If you wish to sell that F-250 quickly, then you'll write, "Extenuating circumstances dictate the sale of this vehicle in a timely manner." JK! I've learned that old reliable "must sell" is out, replaced by the aggressively barbaric "need gone," usually rendered in all caps. In Attleboro, a gentleman selling his 1993 Mazda declares, "Need gone now!" I imagine if you thought the car overpriced, you could confront him by grunting three times and making extended eye contact to communicate a lack of respect.

I know that writers have been decrying the decline of the language probably since Gutenberg fired off the first compendium of fart jokes. But it seems like the situation is getting worse thanks to our constant trend-seeking and immersion in one another's written chatter. If the Internet had been around in e.e. cummings' day, there would've been two weeks in 1951 when everyone got real crazy with their punctuation.

I recognize that informal e-mails, classified ads and quick status updates don't need to conform to the AP Style Guide. And I'm sure that insidious generic Internet-speak creeps into my writing no matter how diligently I attempt to exorcise it. But I still can't help but feel that the more time I spend online, the less articulate I become. LOL, ;), durrrr.



You can say I'm a snob. You can say I'm flat wrong. But unfortunately, I think I'm prolly right. ✖✖✖

The School of Sports {RICH LEVINE}

ON CLAY, REX AND SYNCHRONIZED DIVING

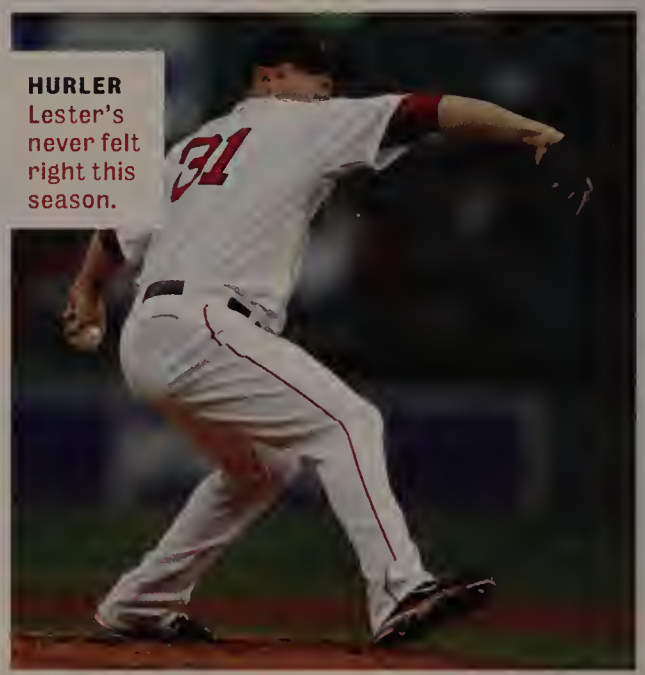
3 RANDOM THOUGHTS

Doc Speaks Up Doc Rivers blamed himself for Ray Allen splitting town, but instead of blame, Doc deserves credit. He didn't do anything wrong. He just did what was best for the team—regardless of his personal relationship with Ray. What else can you ask for?

GAME PLAN
Doc made the right call.

Where'd Rex Go? There's something missing from the Jets/Patriots rivalry this year… oh yeah, more than 100 pounds of Rex Ryan blubber. So, let me be the latest to congratulate Rex on his sexy new physique. It's just too bad there's no surgery to correct his pathetic pair of quarterbacks.

Ignore the Noise It's been a silent off-season for the Bruins, aside from random Internet outbursts from Tim Thomas. But at this point, isn't it time to just ignore old Timmy? He doesn't play for the B's anymore. He doesn't even play hockey. And every time he sounds off on Facebook, there's less of a chance he ever plays again.



ONE BORING SUMMER
It's been a quiet sports summer here in Boston. The Celtics off-season is over; the Bruins off-season never got started; there's no drama at Patriots camp; and the Sox can't carry the dog days like they used to. I never thought I'd say this, but thank God fall is right around the corner.

2 TRAINING CAMP BATTLES

2007 VS. 2012 It's early, but people are already comparing the 2012 Pats to the juggernaut from 2007. In some ways, I get it. The TEs and young RBs give this year's team a few layers that 2007 didn't have. But if I had to choose one, give me Brady-to-Moss all day. (Assuming it's a day when Randy's trying.)

SOLDER VS. SPIKES
I love training camp scuffles, but the recent altercation between Nate Solder and Brandon Spikes was terrifying. Next time those two go at it, the team needs to run for cover and call animal control. There are some things that only a tranquilizer gun can fix.

5 SOX PLOTLINES

HURLER
Lester's never felt right this season.

Beckett Stays Josh Beckett survived the trade deadline, and will more than likely make it through waivers. In other words: We're stuck with him. Is Lucchino delusional enough to believe that this relationship is reparable? Does he really think Beckett's worth the headache? I would have traded him for a bag of Nolan Ryan's nose hair.

Same Old Story Not only did they keep the Texas Tough Guy, but (with apologies to Matt Albers and Scott Podsednik) the Sox didn't do anything at the deadline. On one hand, you understand. After all, the talent's there. But on the other, it was time for a shakeup. It's like Groundhog Day with these guys. Nothing will change until they start making changes.

The Other Arm While Beckett and Jon Lester have played spoilers this summer, Clay Buchholz has been lights out. And really, that's too bad. Right now, Buchholz should be the third head on a monster rotation. Instead, he's the only pitcher carrying his weight in this soap opera—one that should've been canceled last season.

Accepting Applications Rumor has it Bobby Valentine will be fired if Boston doesn't make the playoffs. He's pissed off enough people that you can justify letting him go. But don't think it'll change anything. Bobby V. makes a convenient scapegoat, but he's not the problem. The guy Lucchino should fire is the man in the mirror.

Vote for Pedro The Sox need to find a regular spot for Pedro Ciriaco. Maybe that means benching Mike Aviles, or playing PC in left once/if Carl Crawford has surgery. But whatever it takes, the guy needs to play. He can run, play D, he's crafty with the bat and has a flare for the dramatic. Plus, isn't it fun rooting for another Red Sox named Pedro?

4 DATES TO WATCH

8/9: The Pats host the New Orleans Saints in Week 1 of the NFL preseason, presented by Bounty.

8/12: Hope you've had your fill of synchronized diving for the next four years. The London Olympics end today.

8/17: Dustin Pedroia celebrates his 29th birthday at Yankee Stadium. More importantly, Pedroia's 29?! When did that happen?

Soroff On GREG LOUGANIS

The Olympic champion dishes about dogs, diving and dreaming of playing a ninja.

GOLD MEDALIST AND FIVE-TIME WORLD CHAMPION GREG LOUGANIS, 52, comes to Boston on Aug. 25 as a judge on the only U.S. stop in the Red Bull Cliff Diving World Series, which takes place at the Institute of Contemporary Art in South Boston. A native of San Diego, Louganis' diving career included a silver and four gold medals in the Olympics, and 47 national championships, making him one of the foremost amateur athletes in history. In 1988, he famously hit his head on the diving board and received a concussion during the Olympics in Seoul. He's been a successful actor, speaker, dog trainer and diving coach, and is the author of Breaking the Surface and coauthor of For the Life of Your Dog. As an openly gay man with HIV, he's an outspoken advocate for GLBTQ rights and HIV treatment and prevention. He lives in Malibu.

Jonathan Soroff: How many of the original Olympians do you guess were gay?
Plenty. There was a tradition with Greek soldiers of having a young "assistant." They had a very different attitude toward sex and sexuality.

Did you pave the way for other gay athletes?
I think Matthew Mitcham from Australia was a lot braver, because he came out while he was still competing. I also think that diving is different, in that it's a solo sport. It takes a lot more courage to come out if you're doing a team sport, because you need the support of your teammates.

Do you generally smell like chlorine?
I did for a long time.

Didn't that wreak havoc on your hair?
Yeah. That's why I just cut it off.

You and Anderson Cooper are silver foxes. Are you going to come out over and over again the way he seems to be doing?
Ah, no. Once was enough for me. But I did read a rumor that we were dating, and I was like, "Yeah, I wish." I'd jump on that.

Number-one question fans ask you?
Usually something like, "Do you still have a headache?" If I had a nickel for every time I've heard that…

Most beautiful place to dive?
Platform? I have to say with the Red Bull World Series, Athens was my favorite. After that, probably Yalta.

Dog training is listed before diving on your bio. What's up with that?
Dogs are nicer and easier.

How many do you have at this point?
Right now, only two. My aunt has the other two.

Ever trained a dog to dive?
Yeah! My dogs can dive. They're really good. Both Jack Russells.

Do you think you pushed the boundaries of your sport?
I don't generally think of it that way, but I guess so. Sergei Shalibashvili died doing a reverse three-and-a-half somersault, so maybe I did.

How much Red Bull do you actually drink?
I've got wings.

Dream role as an actor?
To be a superhero or a ninja warrior. Something really physical like that. I love the whole flying thing.

Would you ever do full-frontal nudity?
Yeah, I did, in The Little Dog Laughed. I was 50 at the time.

Single most important thing to keep in mind when you're diving?
Don't f up.

Is Malibu the shallowest place in the world?
Depends. The girls here get their boobs on their 15th or 16th birthday. But if you hang out with the surfers, it's a lot more down-to-earth.

Did you know that Michael Fassbender said he imitated your posture for his role in Prometheus*?*
I read that, and I was really flattered. Is he straight?

I don't know, but if anyone could sway him, it'd probably be you.
I could give it a try.

Highest dive you've ever done?
Ten meters, but I probably went a little bit higher in Acapulco. I'm going to do a dive on the tour, and I'm trying to figure that out. Maybe a three-and-a-half somersault. I'm thinking in Portugal or Oman…

You have to do it in Boston!
No way! The water's too cold.

Those guys in Acapulco. Are they all insane?
In a word? Yes.

Favorite name for a dive?
It's more of a description. I like when they say "cowboy a dive." You're in a tuck with your feet spread apart. Charming visual, huh?

So when are we going to see you on Dancing With the Stars*?*
There's a campaign to get me on it, and I'd love to do that show, but the next season is All-Stars, so I can't be on that. Maybe the season after, I hope.

Do you have a slide on your swimming pool?
No.

Is it true that you don't have a diving board?
It is. But I do have a one-meter platform.

Advice for someone who doesn't know how to dive and wants to learn?
You can jump into the water feet first, right? Just flip it around. And don't practice in the shallow end.

Last question: Can you still rock a Speedo?
I haven't gotten any complaints. ✖✖✖

TAKE THE STAGE BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

OUR ANNUAL GUIDE TO THE LOCAL ACTS YOU SHOULD HEAR RIGHT NOW

SHEA ROSE

Black Girls Rock. The words on Shea Rose's T-shirt set the tone when she took the stage at Johnny D's Uptown for a recent gig, dashing preconceptions of gender, race and musical style.

Opening for idol Nona Hendryx, Rose indeed rocked both originals and covers of the B-52s nugget "Dance This Mess Around" (set for a new EP this fall) and the Cranberries' "Zombie," which included a rap breakdown. Her 2011 mixtape Little Warrior (available for download through her website) further accents Rose's hip-hop side with sassy rhymes over sleek production.

"I love to bridge the gap between musical styles," says Rose, who won the Boston Music award for R&B/soul/urban contemporary artist after graduating from Berklee last year. She also lent vocals to Berklee-bred jazz drummer Terri Lyne Carrington's Grammy-winning the Mosaic Project, alongside such stars as Hendryx, Cassandra Wilson and Esperanza Spalding.

"This is my opportunity to create a lane and go for it," Rose says of her rapid, genre-bridging rise on the local scene. She flashes confidence on songs like "Rockstar 201" (her update of Rihanna's "Rockstar 101") and female empowerment anthem "I'm the S," where Rose snaps, "I don't really care that you got mad girls, and you gotta private jet to fly around the world."

"RAPPING ALLOWS ME TO DELIVER MY MESSAGE IN THE MOST IMPACTFUL WAY."

Hard to believe the Braintree native was a shy girl who wrote poetry and didn't even sing until late in high school. "I was struggling with conforming," says Rose. "I couldn't find myself because of everything I saw around me that was called normal, and I felt so not that."

Things clicked after she enrolled at Berklee, and after initial struggles realized you don't need huge pipes to be a unique singer. And about three years ago, Rose started rapping when drummer Cindy Blackman invited her to record in Italy.

"Rapping allows me to deliver my message in a more concentrated, impactful way," says Rose, who also helps impact the community through her social outreach program, My Angel Wears a Fro. Citing a Janis Joplin sound bite included on Little Warrior, Rose says, "She liked to get on the bottom side of the music... as opposed to floating on top of the music like most chick singers. Rap allows me to do the same, [to] get into the body and feeling of the music."

GHOSTS OF JUPITER

Imagine being able to present your band's music with more mind-bending visual imagery than a Radiohead or Roger Waters concert. It's a surreal reality for Ghosts of Jupiter, whose self-titled debut provides the soundtrack to a kaleidoscopic, state-of-the-art digital show at the Museum of Science's Charles Hayden Planetarium.

"It's kind of a dream come true," singer/keyboardist Nate Wilson says, "and we're reaching people on a nightly basis without even leaving the house. Not that we're not happy to get out there and play gigs."

Indeed, Ghosts of Jupiter perform regularly, roaring to

QUILT

As their van rolls down the California coast on their first cross-country tour, Anna Fox Rochinski of Quilt says, "It's been kind of cool watching the terrain shift." The same can be said of the skeletal, atmospheric patchwork of her aptly named trio, whose music echoes the '60s psychedelia of Jefferson Airplane.

Rochinski, fellow singer/guitarist Shane Butler and drummer/singer John Andrews have just played the Summer of Love environs where Airplane once flew. "We had this one lady dancing to that time period, up front and kind of wilding out," Butler recalls. "We said, 'Well, here we are in San Francisco, and there's the dance.'"

People weren't always dancing in the folk and noise scene where Quilt's members hung out in Jamaica Plain and Cambridge. Both Butler and Rochinski studied visual arts and performed in improvisational and song-based bands. Their tastes spread from old and new psych-rock to choral music, traditional Indian music and Krautrock; Butler cites Sonic Youth, the Velvet Underground and Terry Riley among his many inspirations.

"It's funny living in the age we do where so many musics are accessible and appropriated and restructured and rethought," Butler says. And Quilt's hazy minimalism (sometimes augmented live with loops to lend ambience) grew clearer on the trio's eponymous debut, produced by Apollo Sunshine's Jesse Gallagher over separate summers with Andrews and drummer Taylor McVay.

"I'd say our sound stays pretty curious and intuitive and a process of discovery," says Rochinski.

semifinals of the Rock 'n' Roll Rumble with their earthy psychedelic rock, which evokes Led Zeppelin, Cream, Traffic and Pink Floyd as well as the Black Keys. "We don't sit there and plan out that we want it to sound like 1974, but it just winds up that way," Wilson says. "You can use musical technology not only to create new sounds. You can also regulate old sounds."

Weaned on classic-rock radio in rural New Hampshire, Wilson made initial inroads on the jam-band circuit with his jazz-influenced outfit Percy Hill, then Assembly of Dust. He left AOD to launch the Nate Wilson Group, which became Ghosts of Jupiter, adopting the name just before the band's manager suggested the museum develop an entertainment show for its renovated planetarium. "There's a lot of fortunate coincidence," Wilson says.

"IT'S A DREAM COME TRUE."

That includes finding the right musicians. Guitarists Johnny Trama (also of Dub Apocalypse) and Adam Terrell, bassist Tommy Lada (who did double duty in the Rumble with finalist Garvy J.) and drummer Tom Arey (who's about to tour with the J. Geils Band) put heft behind Wilson's melodic sensibility and metaphorical lyrics.

The quintet's pulsing flow proves perfect for the morphing 3-D geometric patterns that suggest a free fall through an Escher drawing projected on the planetarium dome. Ghosts of Jupiter: Music Experience takes a post-Pixar leap beyond those old Floyd and Zeppelin laser shows. Yet the music stands as an equally fresh experience, in a program ready to franchise to other cities.

"For a band that's struggling to get its music heard and establish a fan base, it's a huge opportunity," Wilson says.

DEBO BAND

Raised in Texas, Danny Mekonnen didn't relate to the music of his Ethiopian parents. Born in Sudan, it was only after he visited Africa and moved to Boston to study jazz that he took an interest in ethnomusicology.

"I suppose you could call it one of these crises of identity," the saxophonist says. "What will my contribution be to the world of music?" He found a connection in Ethiopiques, an album series that showcases Ethiopian popular music from the '60s and '70s, realizing he could "throw it on the iPod and not go through a stack of cassettes at my parents' house."

Now Mekonnen's making his mark with Debo Band, an 11-piece group that just dropped its debut on rock label Sub Pop. "This is what Ethiopian popular music was, drawing on traditions of jazz, funk and horn-based music. If we were a jazz band [doing] cerebral stuff, Sub Pop wouldn't be quite the right place. But the way the band plays, it presents itself more like a rock band."

Indeed, Debo (which means "collected effort" in the Ethiopian language of Amharic) delivers a contemporary kick that blends instruments like sousaphone and accordion, electric guitar and wah-wah violin.

Mekonnen also culled players from his Jamaica Plain neighborhood who had played everything from klezmer to post-punk rock. While the band's debut impresses with airy intricacy in both originals and fresh takes on Ethiopian classics, Debo rachets up the energy live. "You hear those arrangements dissected and broken apart," he says, "and it's a lot more trippy."

DARLINGSIDE

At first, with its stringed instruments and seemingly precious name, Darlingside might be mistaken for a hokey bluegrass group. Wrong. For that matter, the name was derived from the phrase "murder your darlings," coined by literary critic Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch for writers to expunge their work of needless ornament.

"Darlingside is to darlings as pesticide is to furry woodland creatures, except we changed the 'c' to an 's' because we're not super into death," cellist Harris Paseltiner explains. "We like when music starts to defy expectation. We do have some of that lighthearted nature and playfulness, and we are using folk instruments and harmonies, but it launches pretty far from there."

On its album Pilot Machines, Darlingside suggests a band in the vein of indie-rockers Death Cab for Cutie or Punch Brothers. Yet its contemplative pop also echoes members' experiences in choral singing, jazz and classical music as students at Williams College in the Berkshires. And violinist Auyon Mukharji spent a year-long fellowship studying traditional music and instruments in Ireland, Brazil and Turkey, leading to unusual harmonies.

"FIRST AND FOREMOST WE CHOOSE SONGS THAT HAVE A POWERFUL CORE MELODY."

Songwriting usually begins simply, with just acoustic guitar and vocals. "As much as we like to explore the textures and develop the songs and get into the progressive zone," Paseltiner says, "first and foremost we choose songs that have an elegance and powerful core melody."

Live shows also dash the seemingly cerebral nature of the group, which shared a house in Hadley before moving to Somerville and Cambridge. Bassist David Senft and Paseltiner trade lead vocals as well as guitars and between-song barbs with Mukharji (who doubles on mandolin), guitarist Don Mitchell and drummer Sam Kapala, as Darlingside works into its musical and personal comfort zone.

"We're very close and have that kind of trust," says Paseltiner, adding, "Whatever role needs to be filled, people will step in and fill that, and that's been really liberating."

MOUFY

Jeffrey Fortunato earned his nickname for being mouthy around his Roxbury neighborhood. Now his volubility has spread via the Internet. "I'm part of the generation that grew into social media," says Moufy, who boasts 34,500 Facebook fans. "It's really an engine that lets us speak directly to my fans."

"EVERYBODY HAS THEIR OWN PROBLEMS, NO MATTER THEIR BACKGROUND."

Just out of his teens, he also fuels his fast-breaking buzz by posting a steady stream of mixtapes and videos that pump his facile, catchy and well-produced rap to a broad audience.

"I was a kid growing up in the inner city and going to private school, so I was meshing between two worlds," says Moufy, who attended Cambridge's prestigious Buckingham Browne & Nichols school. "I struggled in private school 'cause I was really confused.... I wasn't mature enough to turn it on and off."

The Dominican rapper reflects that struggle in his music. "If I haven't seen it, I don't talk about it. When I talk about the streets and shootings and people dealing drugs and mothers going through it, I'm not lying. That's real," Moufy says. "But in private school, they still had their own issues."

He raised eyebrows last year when his video for "Miss Newton" depicted a girl lost in alcohol-fueled promiscuity who took her own life. "Those issues were relevant in private school," he says. "Everybody has their own problems, no matter their background."

Moufy plans to drop another mixtape by October, while his team delivers concert tickets and T-shirts with his "Star Gang" logo (a cartoon star sticking out its tongue) and posting fan photos on Facebook. "The name 'Star Gang' comes from a group of kids reaching for the stars," Moufy says. "That includes everyone, 'cause everyone has a dream."

SHERMAN BURNS

In its name, this Allston band nods to Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman, who literally burned a path through the South during the Civil War. "He was ruthless," says guitarist/singer Josh MacGregor, "so we thought it would be a fitting moniker."

He cites Sherman Burns' often-merciless volume. In regards to the prog-grunge band's seismic shifts in tone and tempo, MacGregor adds that members butt heads with their different influences.

"Each one of us is attempting to get our piece into the mix, and it's like a giant clashing," he says. "And we're still battling onstage. That's kind of what gives us that powerful sound."

That sound evokes groups like Nirvana, as band members were first exposed to rock in the grunge era, but the Sherman Burns sound sharply dives off other cliffs. MacGregor embraces post-hardcore outfits such as Fugazi and Hot Water Music, while Aaron Silverstein favors more noisy, experimental bands. And with bassist/singer Andrew Mildenburg and guitarist Stu Grove, "anything goes," MacGregor says.

"A lot of our songs are the result of overanalysis," he says. "If we feel like the sound is stagnant or has been achieved so many times before by countless other people, we try to do something to alter it in some way."

MacGregor has known Grove since high school on the same North Shore punk scene that spawned Dead Cats Dead Rats. But Sherman Burns builds on those roots with its thicker, more harmonic structure, evident from the start of the quartet's self-titled debut. "I use my bones to build my own skeleton key," MacGregor and Mildenburg harmonize over an arpeggiated guitar line before their haunting melody erupts into crosscurrents and screams.

"I like a good melodic sensibility," MacGregor says, "so I try to work that into music that's more aggressive and dramatic."

AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLER

Dave Munro took the literal approach to naming his band, having written and recorded songs after shifts at his former gig as a Navy air traffic controller. "I just entertained myself with my four-track," the Malden native says. "I was working on [music] whenever I could. It was always going on in my head."

He continued to follow that passion, whether jogging or doing post-deployment sandblasting jobs. "You can't hear anything when you're doing that," Munro says. "I'd just sing under my helmet."

Through a friend, his song demos got into the hands of

COYOTE KOLB

With its gritty grooves and harmonica bends, Coyote Kolb would be at home in a blues bar. With its acoustic twang, undercut by pedal steel and banjo, the group often draws the Americana tag and could appeal to old-school country fans. And when guitarist Chadley Kolb sings in mournful tones, echoes of Alice in Chains creep in, making them fit for the alt-rock crowd.

"Nobody wants to play the same bar over and over again," says Kolb, whose band mates insert harmonies that nod to gospel, blues and folk-rock groups. "You hope you can string it all together with a constant fiber, and I think we're still finding that as a group," he says of his quintet, which gelled over the past year and a half to record the crisply shaded United State.

Growing up in small-town southern Maine, Kolb migrated through grunge, hardcore punk and metal bands before moving to Boston, where he experimented with circuit-bent electronic music. Then he returned to the acoustic guitar, reflecting on the country & western and classic rock records that his grandfather had played, which Kolb describes as "the first music that ever really caught me."

He also dug into early blues, and when he saw Sonny Jim Clifford playing harmonica on the street, Kolb introduced himself. They formed a trio with drummer Matty Maybruck before adding bassist Owen Beane and pedal steel/banjo player Noel Coakley.

As for the name Coyote Kolb, the bandleader says, "It's a tribal name, a character name… and the coyote, symbolically in American folklore, is both the creator and mischievous rebel who incites the challenging of authority. So I thought that pretty well described me, and I would extend that to my brothers."

Boston-bred L.A. producer Bleu, who became Munro's collaborator in the studio, icing his tunes with strings and electronic effects. "Working with him made everything so limitless," Munro says.

Multi-instrumentalist bandmate Steve Scott arranged a 40-piece orchestra for one song from ATC's second album, Nordo. And live, Munro's group has grown to six or eight members (or 20, depending on the number of guest players), evoking a sonically fleshed-out cousin to They Might Be Giants influenced by the Beatles and Fleetwood Mac. Bassist/banjo player Casey Sullivan also has stepped forward as a female foil to the reedy-voiced Munro.

A SONICALLY FLESHED-OUT COUSIN TO THEY MIGHT BE GIANTS, INFLUENCED BY THE BEATLES

The affable frontman calls Air Traffic Controller "suburban indie-pop," noting, "I think of 'suburban' as sitting in the back of your mom's station wagon, listening to her switch all the radio stations."

JAGGERY

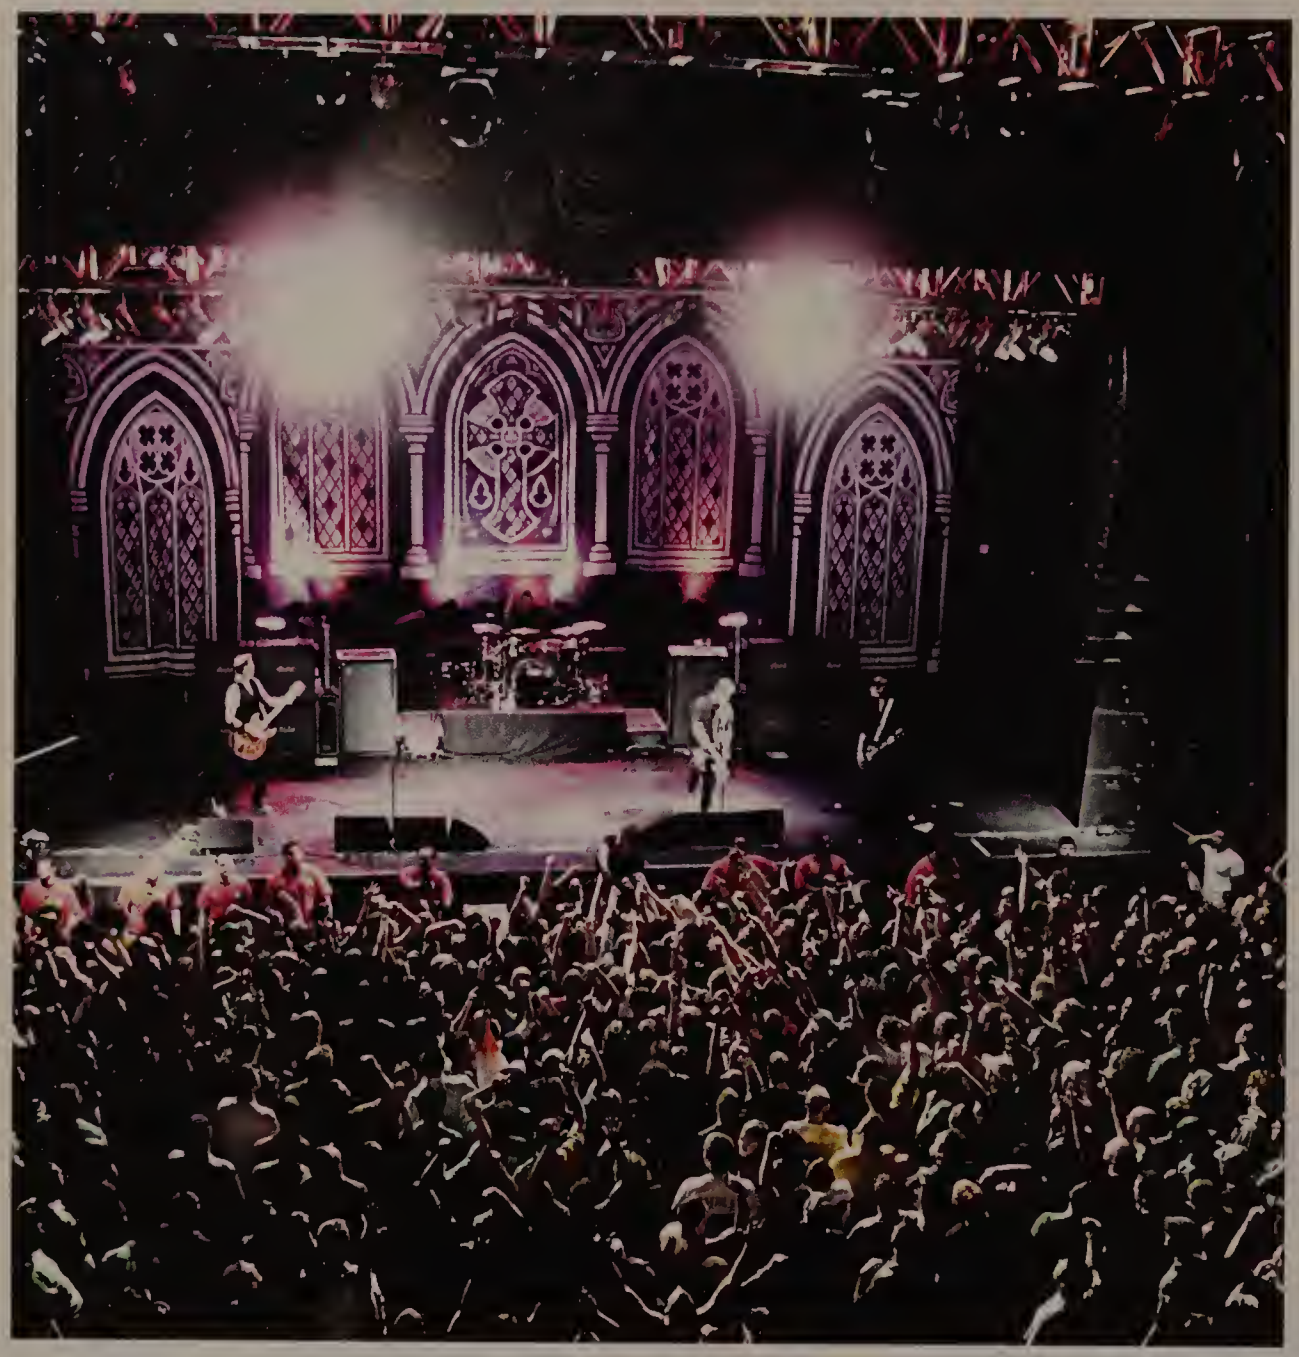
When singer/pianist Mali Sastri performs with her art-rock combo Jaggery, her voice conjures personas from haunting siren to primal demon. She traces that range to voice movement therapy.

"The voice is the bridge between the inside and the outside. It can be the place where thoughts and emotions get jammed," says the singer, who studied voice movement therapy in London. "[It's] letting everything out through the voice, the ugly sounds—not just what we think of as pretty—and all the personalities."

That touches on the dark side of Sastri's life. She cites self-hatred and eating disorders that plagued her for years. "I was dealing with body issues through dance," she says, "punishing the body but also trying to enjoy it, trying to express something."

Music was always another outlet, and it took the forefront after a series of dance injuries. She cites Cyndi Lauper and the Cocteau Twins among early influences, and she was inspired by Lexington comrade Amanda Palmer, who, after high school, invited Sastri to help write a group-penned play.

Sastri went on to London and New York, where she formed Jaggery (named after an unrefined brown sugar) eight years ago. The band has solidified over the past few years with upright bassist Tony Leva, drummer Daniel Schubmehl, violist Rachel Jayson (also of Walter Sickert and the Army of Broken Toys) and harpist Petaluma Vale.



The group's sense of dramatic atmosphere should find fresh grist in an upcoming album that addresses Sastri's feelings after reading Truman Capote's In Cold Blood. "I like the Jungian idea of the shadow self," Sastri says, "and I ran with it."

A BIG NIGHT OUT

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU / ILLUSTRATIONS BY VIDHYA NAGARAJAN

EXPLODING AMPS. PASSED-OUT DRUMMERS. BAD SANDWICH TRAYS. Even though a band might log hundreds of shows every year, some nights stand out from the blur. We asked one question of Boston musicians, from punk-cabaret pioneer Amanda Palmer and folksinger Ellis Paul, to hardcore rapper Slaine and iconic keyboardist/producer Al Kooper: What was the most memorable concert you've ever played?

KEN CASEY THE DROPKICK MURPHYS

All over the world for 16 years, you see some s, but just recently in Rome the show was invaded by 60 soccer hooligans who attacked everyone and sprayed us with tear gas onstage. Crazy night. But once the riot was over and the tear gas cleared, we played an acoustic set with all the lights on, and it was like one big happy sing-along. That was followed by our first-ever show in Moscow, where the barricade and stage collapsed. Good times.

AMANDA PALMER

Playing with Patti Smith at the Meltdown festival in London was a trip and a half. I think it was 2006; Patti was curating the festival, and she'd chosen [my band] the Dresden Dolls to perform on a multi-act, night-long tribute to Brecht. I think it was us, Antony, Marc Almond, the Tiger Lillies, the Finn Brothers… just a list of theater-freaky luminaries as long as your arm, playing at the Royal Festival Hall. My brain spun. And I watched Patti Smith totally f up "Mack the Knife" and laugh her way through all the f-ups, totally charming the whole audience. My hero.

MIKE D'ANTONIO
KILLSWITCH ENGAGE

Killswitch Engage played the Download Festival 2010 in the U.K. with AC/DC. As if sharing the stage with AC/DC wasn't enough, there were 110,000 people in attendance that day. To see a sea of people that big is overwhelming, to say the least, and it can be hard to keep your wits about you. Usually in a case like this, I stare at the floor for the first few songs. Then I gradually get up enough courage to pick my head up and look at the crowd. It was truly a mind-blowing experience.

ROGER MILLER
MISSION OF BURMA/ALLOY ORCHESTRA

I was touring in my Maximum Electric Piano mode in 1987, and I was at O'Cayz Corral in Madison, Wis. I noticed that the booker, who was a friend of mine, was watching me intently, perched like a bird on the bar about 15 feet from the stage. As the composition shifted into chaotic noise territory (lots of distortion, piling up of delays, etc.), I noted out of the corner of my eye that his cheeks were oddly expanded. Then I saw him put a

SLAINE

My group, La Coka Nostra, did a show in Switzerland at the Frauenfeld Festival in 2010. There were about 50,000 people there, and the place was going nuts. Toward the end of our set, we always do a paranoid old Non Phixion song called "Black Helicopters," where we talk about black helicopters following us wherever we go, and we have a helicopter sound playing while we tell everybody to put two middle fingers up in the air and dedicate it to anyone you ever wanted to say "f you" to. Out of nowhere a black helicopter comes hovering over the crowd and stops. We couldn't believe it. So immediately I incited everybody to aim their middle fingers at the helicopter and say "f you!" It was amazing: 50,000 people repeatedly screaming in unison at the helicopter. The audience thought we staged the helicopter to come and it was part of the set, but it wasn't. To this day, we still don't know where that helicopter came from or who was in it.

CHAD URMSTON

DISPATCH

The Hatch Shell [farewell show in 2004] was unbelievable. To wake up that morning and hear that by 8 am there were already 20,000 people on the Esplanade, and then for the crowd to grow five times that by 3 pm. It was a beautiful day, with people in trees, on top of monuments, jumping into the Charles River, packed onto Storrow Drive. It was such a weird feeling, too hard to process, like playing a concert to a brontosaurus.

ELLIS PAUL

Many shows have been memorable for various reasons over the years. Yet one sticks out from the rest in hindsight. I performed at the base of the Twin Towers in New York on Aug. 11, 2001, a month before the tragedy of 9/11. I was amazed at how incredibly large the buildings were—and in that moment held onto the powerful thought that humans are capable of anything we set to our hearts and minds. The gig had a few hundred people, and afterwards, a group of French students who were visiting the States cornered me at the side of the stage for an impromptu unplugged concert as the sun was setting. The world felt both small and enormous that day.

AL KOOPER

Probably backing Bob Dylan at the Newport Folk Festival in 1965. If anybody doesn't know why, they probably shouldn't be reading this, wouldn't you say? We only played for 15 minutes, but I think Bob got his point across, and that's saying something, because I've been playing professionally since 1958. OK, I have to go lie down now. ××× match directly in front of his face, and he proceeded to spray out the lighter fluid he had been holding in his mouth. I was engulfed in flames and smoke, and the temperature rose at least 30 degrees. I could barely see, but I kept on attacking my piano strings with a guitar slide, holding my breath. When the smoke cleared and my visibility was more than two feet, I saw my man was still perched on the bar with a big grin on his face. I made it out alive, and we were both amused immensely. No burn marks were on my face.

Landmark Performance

FLIGHTS OF FANCY

IF A GLOBE-TROTTING vacation is beyond your budget this summer, the Boston Lyric Opera and Boston Landmarks Orchestra can transport you to places far from Storrow Drive. In an aural sense, at least.

On Aug. 8, the ensembles present a free operatic adventure titled Around the World in 80 Minutes. Taking off from the Hatch Shell and touching down in France, Italy, Japan and Sri Lanka, with a playlist of Puccini, Wagner, Mozart and Bernstein, they're serving up the world without the fuss of layovers and body scans. But if the weather's good, you can still take your shoes off. JULIA GRASSO

Around the World in 80 Minutes takes place on Aug. 8 at 7 pm at the DCR Hatch Memorial Shell, Boston (617-542-6772) blo.org

Dance Dance Revolution

Jump Start

At Boston's biggest contemporary dance festival, performers from San Francisco to New York make leaps and bounds to redefine the borders of artistic movement. Watch as a dance trio tries its hand (and arms and feet) at biographies of Jeff Koons and Andy Warhol, while companies like the Houston Metropolitan sashay in equally novel directions. If the groundbreaking works don't speak for themselves, catch renowned choreographers, critics and photographers between the shows. See what takes shape on Aug. 18 at John Hancock Hall. Alexis Cheney

The Amazing Spider-Man ★ ½ It's déjà vu all over again in this lazy, rote retelling of the web slinger's origin story, rebooted a mere 10 years since Sam Raimi's effervescent adaptation for the sole purpose of allowing Sony to keep the movie rights. That's correct, it's a film that exists only as contract extension, and this two-and-a-half hour slog feels as inspired as that sounds. The Social Network's Andrew Garfield pouts and poses, as the title role has been recast as a somber Twilight-type haunted by his missing parents (who are teased to figure prominently in a sequel that's scheduled to hit theaters in 2014). That's the rub with modern franchise filmmaking: Everybody's too busy planning for subsequent installments that they forget to tell a coherent story in the first. Director Marc Webb has no sense of pacing or visual bravado, and the movie often grinds to a halt on curiously empty NYC streets. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Avengers ★★★ It was a rough takeoff. After five movies of buildup, the often crummy (see Thor, Iron Man 2, The Incredible Hulk) but occasionally wonderful (Captain America: The First Avenger) Marvel Films' strategy of building a bridge to nowhere at last pays off with a rock 'em, sock 'em, superhero spectacular, in which Earth's mightiest heroes team up to take on an alien invasion in midtown Manhattan. Playing out like a fanboy's nocturnal emission, we finally get to see what would happen if Iron Man fought Thor. But what makes the picture click is writer/director Joss Whedon's knack for snappy banter, as he supplies killer one-liners to Robert Downey Jr.'s debauched Tony Stark and plays to the fissure between Mark Ruffalo's laid-back line readings and his gigantic green alter ego. Massively scaled, coldly impersonal set pieces abound, but the character interactions zing. Whedon isn't much of an action director, but he's gifted with an overqualified cast and allows them to quip away to their hearts' content. (In the suburbs.)

Beasts of the Southern Wild ★★★★ This Sundance sensation is one of the most poignant things I've ever seen. A portrait of a poor New Orleans community bracing for Hurricane Katrina, Beasts of the Southern Wild is so infused with fanciful flourishes that most of the time it feels like Days of Heaven by way of The Road Warrior. Young Quvenzhané Wallis stars as six-year-old Hushpuppy, who lives with her alcoholic father (Dwight Henry) in a junkyard community called the Bathtub. Director Benh Zeitlin drops us into this world with no explanation, and it may take a while to adjust to the harsh environment and oddball speech patterns. Oh, and there are also recently unfrozen, prehistoric aurochs roaming through the proceedings. It's a purposefully abstract piece, never a movie about "poverty" or "Katrina," but about something much harder to pin down. Eventually, it all comes down to Hushpuppy's indomitable spirit and a final shot that sends you soaring out of the theater. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

The Campaign ★★ There's material for a timely satire lurking underneath all the buffoonery in this comedy from director Jay Roach, best known for running the Austin Powers and Fockers franchises into the ground, as he can never tell when the horse he's beating is already dead. Will Ferrell stars as a dopey Republican congressman running unopposed for his fifth term. Due to a rash of sex scandals, plus the widely acknowledged fact that he's an imbecile, he earns the ire of two billionaire industrialists (John Lithgow and Dan Aykroyd, calling themselves "job creators") who decide to challenge him with a crony's weirdo son (Zach Galifianakis). Promising portions of The Campaign illustrate that it doesn't matter what you say in politics as long as you mention Jesus, guns and the troops, but the performances are fatally oversized, and the candidates' baby-punching, sex-tape shenanigans escalate so far over the top that they overshadow the movie's purpose. Taken down 10 notches, it might've worked. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Celeste and Jesse Forever ★★ ½ Considering it's one of those vanity projects in which TV actors try to break into film by making a Sundance entry about the relationships of well-off urbanites, Rashida Jones' screenwriting debut isn't half bad. Or at least it's agreeable in that mode of movies that rip off When Harry Met Sally in the way When Harry Met Sally ripped off Annie Hall. Jones stars as a high-strung PR type who recently divorced her longtime sweetheart (Andy Samberg) even though they've remained best friends, and he still bums around in the guesthouse. It's clear their chummy arrangement has kept them from moving on, at least until the plot contrives to have him deal with accidental fatherhood after a fling. The kicker is that sometimes people grow into the person you always wanted them to be after your time together is over—a melancholy conceit that this affable, sitcom-y picture doesn't quite figure out how to handle. (At Kendall Square.)

The Dark Knight Rises ★★★ Too much is never enough for Christopher Nolan, and the third and final installment in his Batman trilogy might be the biggest movie I've ever seen. Not the best, mind you, just the largest and most ambitious. The Dark Knight Rises is a sprawling mess that basically reboots itself and starts all over again roughly halfway through its ludicrous two and half hours, but by the time the fifth or sixth act rolled around, I learned to stop worrying and love the enormity. Sure, The Dark Knight Rises pays a bit of lip service to our recent economic woes, staging shootouts on Wall Street trading floors and offering copious Occupy Gotham monologues. But there's only so far you can go in this direction when your movie's hero happens to be a billionaire playboy. Anyone who claims they can spot a coherent political agenda in this picture is lying. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Dirty Work

Magnum Opus

In Don Seigel's 1971 hit, Clint Eastwood's famed role founded the classic trope of a tough-guy cop who plays by his own rules. As "Dirty" Harry Callahan, Eastwood portrays a San Francisco detective who goes rogue in the pursuit of ruthless serial killer. Callahan gets his man—then sheds his police badge, immortalizing himself as cinema's preeminent executioner of vigilante justice. If you're feeling lucky, catch Dirty Harry on Aug. 11 at the Brattle Theatre.

alongside Soderbergh's The Girlfriend Experience as a detached portrait of sex workers in a floundering economy. Tatum's goofy, aging stripper is suddenly forced to reevaluate a life of go-nowhere day jobs and boogie nights once he recruits the Kid (Alex Pettyfer) into his backstage world of manscaped pelvic thrusts. There are threesomes and drugs. But, as usual, Soderbergh eyes it all with clinical reserve, aiming for a painterly sociological study of a cash-only subculture living for the moment, because tomorrow is something that requires equity and an acceptance that dangles beyond the characters' grasps. Lording over them all is Matthew McConaughey in a showstopping turn as the slightly sinister, self-parodying club owner whose delusional grandeur suggests a bare-chested Mephistopheles. Between bumps and grinds, the film has a lot to say about class structure in America today. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Moonrise Kingdom ★★★★ Director Wes Anderson's dollhouse sets and Peanuts costumes can sometimes distract from the pathos and heartbreak lurking beneath the surface of his twee tales of damaged men who refuse to grow up. While Moonrise Kingdom is Anderson's most meticulously designed picture, it's also his most emotionally accessible. Riffing on the young-lovers-on-the-lam genre (with plenty of shout-outs to Badlands and Pierrot Le Fou), the film finds star-crossed 12-year-olds running away from home on the fictional New England island of New Penzance during the summer of 1965. The adults in pursuit are a classically broken bunch, with Edward Norton as a scoutmaster out of his league, Bill Murray as a cuckold in denial and the pitch-perfect Bruce Willis as a heartbroken cop called "the sad dumb policeman" behind his back. Shot in gorgeously grainy Super 16mm, Moonrise Kingdom alternates between the flush of first love and the ache of middle-aged compromise. Just lovely. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

People Like Us ★ ½ This movie is predicated on misunderstandings that would never transpire if only the characters bothered to learn each other's last names. Transformers screenwriter Alex Kurtzman's directorial debut stars Chris Pine as Sam, the kind of callow yuppie that Tom Cruise could play in his sleep. (Unfortunately, Chris Pine is no Tom Cruise.) After the death of his estranged father, he receives a shaving kit full of $100 bills and instructions to give them to a mysterious other family he didn't know he had. Sam's long-lost sister (Elizabeth Banks) is a recovering alcoholic with a delinquent kid, and instead of just handing her the money, we spend a very long movie with Sam pathologically lying and cozying up to her for reasons that don't make any sense. Michelle Pfeiffer attempts to cry through her Botox, and it's hard to feel much sympathy for people too stupid to ask the obvious questions. (In the suburbs.)

Prometheus ★★ Director Ridley Scott's space odyssey attempts to rework remnants of his 1979 masterpiece Alien by ditching the blue-collar reality and lean screenwriting in favor of enough gaseous philosophizing about the origin of the species to fuel a dorm-room bong session. Alas, we're back in Chariots of the Gods territory, with extraterrestrial thugs foiling creationism while a band of scientists follow clues from some ancient cave paintings to a distant planet, hoping to meet our makers. From moment to moment, Prometheus is gorgeous. The best-looking stupid movie I've seen in years, the film is a triumph of production design but a screenwriting disaster. Starting with Noomi Rapace's Christian Darwinist (hello, contradictions), these characters refuse to abide by any sort of logic. There's a nifty performance by Michael Fassbender as an android obsessed with Lawrence of Arabia, but most of his actions remain inexplicable. It's more like a trailer for the inevitable sequels. In space, no one can hear you groan. (In the suburbs.)

The Queen of Versailles ★★★ ½ Originally intended as a snickering portrait of the grotesquely wealthy David and Jackie Siegel's quest to build the biggest, tackiest homestead in the history of real estate, director Lauren Greenfield's research lucked into a recession, and the economic collapse transformed a bit of reality-show lookie-loo into a strangely empathetic depiction of what happens when billionaires are suddenly forced to live like mere millionaires. Once, Siegel was the nation's most successful Florida time-share hustler, selling dreams of luxury to those who could barely afford them. But the chickens come home to roost with a vengeance after 2008's Wall Street disaster, and his adorably dim-witted trophy wife, Jackie, with breasts inflated to the size of basketballs, never quite grasps the enormity of the cataclysm. You can tell how much time has gone by in this picture by the amount of dog crap littering the carpet, as the couple's absurd manse lapses into decay. Their plight becomes America's writ large, except more tasteless. (At Kendall Square.)

Safety Not Guaranteed ★★ Aubrey Plaza's disdain gets such a workout every week on Parks and Recreation that she's become the poster girl for scorn made sexy. Finally given her own vehicle, Plaza does her best to carry a wheezy collection of Sundance stereotypes on her shoulders, but Safety Not Guaranteed is one of those half-finished films that plays better at festivals. As an intern for a trendy magazine, Plaza finds herself investigating a classified ad placed by a purported time-traveler who's really just a mentally ill dollar-store clerk. Subject to the whims of her hedonistic boss (a very funny Jake M. Johnson), Plaza's character cozies up with this adorable crackpot and the love story blooms in time with some acoustic guitar montages. Produced by indie exemplars Jay and Mark Duplass, Safety Not Guaranteed suffers from their trademark twee music cues, garbage cinematography and tiny wisp of a script. Plaza can carry a movie, just not this one. (At Kendall Square.)

Savages ★★★ Oliver Stone's scattergun satire hits more often than it misses in this nasty little number, which adapts Don Winslow's novel into a take-no-prisoners attack on the futility of the war on drugs. Blake Lively offers up some presumably deliberate awful narration as a vacuous beach bum frolicking in a blissful ménage a trois with marijuana entrepreneurs played by Aaron Johnson and Taylor Kitsch. But there's trouble in paradise when Mexico's Baja cartel comes calling, here led by Salma Hayek in a Bettie Page wig. Johnson and Lively are deadweights on the narrative, but Savages springs to life in the margins. There's a grotesque turn by Benicio Del Toro as a shifty enforcer prone to sickly comic flourishes, and a paunchy, balding John Travolta delivers his best performance in years as a wormy DEA agent attempting to play both sides against the middle. Savages is lurid, violent and occasionally silly. It's also gutsy, rousing and electric. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Snow White and the Huntsman ★ ½ That mirror on the wall that Charlize Theron is constantly consulting is obviously broken, because it keeps telling her that Kristen Stewart's Snow White is the fairest of them all. Fairer than Charlize Theron? Yeah, right. This year's second reworking of the Grimm fairy tale plunges into Lord of the Rings territory, with director Rupert Sanders shoplifting images and a self-serious tone from every swords-and-CGI opus from the past few years. Theron vamps it up at late-career Faye Dunaway levels as the wicked queen, while Chris Hemsworth aches in the background as the titular huntsman, pining away with little to do besides lend the movie a Twilight-style love triangle. Things get really weird when a spate of Britain's finest character actors (Ian McShane, Ray Winstone, Bob Hoskins, etc.) find their heads grafted onto tiny bodies as Snow White's dwarf sidekicks, but the movie remains as inert as Stewart's slouchy, disinterested performance. She looks as bored as I felt. (In the suburbs.)

Take This Waltz ★★★ ½ The marginalization of movie theaters continues with Magnolia Pictures releasing titles via Video on Demand upwards of a month prior to theatrical release. This is a thorny issue, but however one chooses to see Sarah Polley's heartfelt sophomore directorial effort, it's a film worth watching. Michelle Williams stars as a happy housewife settled into a routine with her hubby of five years, played with affable obliviousness by Seth Rogen. But everything ruptures once she meets their new neighbor (Luke Kirby), a shy artist who trots around in a rickshaw and secretly yearns for the married lady across the street. Keenly sensitive to the inconvenience of desire, Polley (who also wrote the screenplay) dances around their tentative courtship, with the couple increasingly weighed down by the knowledge that their happiness will only result in misery for others. A couple of misjudged surreal flourishes muck up the movie's lived-in rhythm, but is there a subtler, more emotionally transparent actress than Williams working today? Her silences speak volumes. (At Coolidge Corner.)

Shaking Things Up

Vote of Disapproval

The Campaign's satirical edge is dulled by too much buffoonery from stars Zach Galifianakis and Will Ferrell.

Ted ★★ ½ Much like writer/director Seth MacFarlane's animated-TV shows, Ted is hysterical, until all of a sudden it isn't anymore. As most comedies these days revolve around man-children refusing to grow up, give MacFarlane credit for taking the gag to its logical conclusion and casting Mark Wahlberg as a 30-something who can't let go of his teddy bear. That the stuffed animal is a walking, talking drug user is only half of the joke. Seeking to settle down with his girlfriend, played by Mila Kunis—who unfortunately is presented as the same tired scold we see in most films in which women aren't allowed to be funny—Wahlberg's dopey meathead routine is a brilliant match for a perverted bear. Like all MacFarlane comedies, Ted leans mainly on non sequiturs and pop-culture references. His jokes rely on recognition, not wit. Still, it's all amusing for an hour or so, until it decides to have a plot. The third act is just stuffing. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

To Rome With Love ★★ ½ Last year's Midnight in Paris was profound in a breezy way. To Rome With Love is just plain breezy, but I didn't mind. Charming, second-tier Woody Allen, the film is a mashup of four disconnected shorts. (The picture sometimes feels as though Allen was rifling through his desk and came across some unfinished New Yorker pieces and decided to fashion them after the Italian omnibus films of the 1960s.) It's good to see Allen back on screen, kvetching and complaining his way through a Roman holiday when he discovers a brilliant opera singer who can only perform in the shower. There's some silliness with Roberto Benigni as an everyman who becomes inexplicably famous, and some bawdy jokes by Penélope Cruz as one of Allen's genius prostitutes. Best in show goes to Alec Baldwin as an aging architect revisiting his wayward youth and watching a younger version of himself make all the same mistakes. Clumsily stitched together, To Rome With Love is a trifle, but it's an agreeable one. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

2 Days in New York ★★★ With Before Sunrise and Before Sunset and now this follow-up to her 2007 directorial debut, 2 Days in Paris, Julie Delpy may be the only person making sequels to romantic comedies. Judging from the goofy, effervescent results, maybe she's the only person who should be allowed to. Having ditched the tiresome Adam Goldberg sometime in between the two pictures, Delpy's endearingly neurotic photographer now finds herself settled down with a buttoned-up public radio host played by Chris Rock. But their domestic tranquility is shattered by a visit from her nutzoid family, with Delpy's real-life father, Albert, once again reprising his role as her horny, ill-mannered old man. There's also a slatternly sister with a sleazebag old boyfriend in tow, yet what's funniest about the movie is Rock's counterintuitive turn as the straight man. He's got some delightful slow-burns here, often only confessing his exasperation to a cardboard cut-out of Barack Obama. It's an extremely silly confection, but I fell for it. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

The Watch ★ ½ Slogging through over-familiar riffs and persistent product placements at a pace that could generously be described as lethargic, this slob-comedy may not be the worst movie of the summer, but it's definitely the laziest. Ben Stiller recycles his uptight nudnik routine for the umpteenth time as a dorky Costco manager who starts a neighborhood watch in his stuffy suburb. Vince Vaughn phones in the loudmouth shtick and signs up for the cause as an excuse to get away from his wife. Jonah Hill joins the gang as a psychotic gun-nut who keeps an arsenal in his bedroom and just wants to shoot people. (Not sure if this was ever funny, but it obviously isn't right now.) Turns out some extraterrestrials are attacking, but the movie is too half-assed to do anything with the twist besides let the actors stand in front of drab surroundings improvising extra helpings of profanity until scenes run twice as long as necessary. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

C. Taylor Crothers

Jersey Girl

Talent for Miles She may be young, but singer/songwriter Sarah Miles is anything but a newbie. At 23, she's already performed at the White House, on the Today show and toured with the likes of Teddy Geiger and Ingram Hill. Years spent singing choir and a cappella have developed this New Jersey native's indie-pop sound. But it's that touch of good ol' Southern comfort that puts Miles in the same vein as Carrie Underwood. Hear Miles' charming twang and lighthearted, youthful harmonies at the Middle East Upstairs on Aug. 12.

Open Book

They say a picture is worth 1,000 words. Ars Libri and the Robert Klein Gallery have collaborated to find the truth behind the old adage in their exhibit By the Book, in which photographs by various artists investigate the narratives within an image. Jeff Brouws' prints, for instance, bring life to the ramshackle. His "Partially Painted Pick-ups" explores national identity through snapshots of road signs, gas stations and abandoned factories. See his portfolio of stories through the month of August at Ars Libri. Brigid Wright

girl scouts of eastern massachusetts

You were once a Girl Scout. You hiked trails and camped out under the stars. You canvassed your neighborhood to sell Thin Mints. You honed your skills with each badge you earned. You learned to lead.

Each of us has a success story to tell and memories to share. Reconnect with old friends, and support this new generation of girls.

All's Fair

Man Up In local writer David R. Gillham's debut novel, it's Berlin, 1943, and while the men are off at war, the home front has become a woman's world. On the surface, Sigrid Schroder is the perfect soldier's wife, but she's protecting two dangerous secrets: a family she's hiding from persecution, and the memory of her lost Jewish lover. Gillham explains how he got in touch with his feminine side on Aug. 16 at the Brookline Booksmith.

The IMPROPER On the Town!

We salute Boston's finest restaurants and clubs

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

BISTRO DU MIDI [272 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-426-7878, bistrodumidi.com] Bistro du Midi showcases authentic Provencal cuisine in a warm, welcoming, and beautiful setting. Inspired by the ingredients and culinary techniques of the Midi region in France, Executive Chef, Robert Sisca presents modern, ingredient-driven creations that are at once refined and approachable. From a carefully conceived charcuterie selection to the freshest seafood, meats and vegetables, Bistro du Midi brings the simple, clean and bold flavors of Provence to Boston.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 Tremont Street, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

THE PURPLE SHAMROCK [1 Union Street, Boston, 617-227-2060, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the freedom trail across from Boston City Hall on Union Street. The Purple Shamrock is the perfect place to stop by and have a bite to eat. The fare is composed of New England specialties with burgers, sandwiches, hearty pastas, fresh seafood, tender steaks and other great favorites. Let's not forget their infamous Shamrock Brunch served every Saturday and Sunday that is often paired with live music. After dark, The Purple Shamrock has nightly entertainment with a mix of live music, karaoke and DJ's. At The Purple Shamrock there is something for everyone.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

BRUNCH

THE BILTMORE BAR & GRILL [1205 Chestnut Street, Newton, 617-527-2550, thebiltmoregrill.com] Opened at the start of Prohibition, the Biltmore started out as a speakeasy and has been a neighborhood favorite in Newton's historic Upper Falls ever since. Brunch is served Saturday, Sunday and Monday holidays featuring creative menu items such as Huevos Tacos, Sausage Fritter Sandwich and Biltmore's famous Chicken & Waffles. Brunch libations such as the Danish Bloody Mary and Red Beer (The Cure!) help ease your way into the day.

LOCAL 149 [149 P Street, South Boston, 617-269-0900, local149.com] A neighborhood joint in South Boston's Citypoint, Local 149 offers historic roots and lots of heart & soul. Brunch is served Saturdays and Sundays featuring new classics from Chef Leah DuBois such as "Toast To Life and Bacon" and the "Lobster MacMuffin". 'Spicy Pimento Cheese Fries' and 'Dixie Chicken" start the day right washed down with a Bucket of High Life ponies or the $5 Milkshake.

MOOO.... [15 Beacon Street, Boston, 617-670-2515, mooorestaurant.com] In the shadow of Beacon Hill's lofty State House and within the grandeur of the XV Beacon Hotel is MOOO...., a steakhouse extraordin-aire. Chef David Hutton offers a modern approach of fine selected meat and seafood dishes. Breakfast and lunch weekdays, dinner daily, Sunday brunch, bar and lounge. FOUNTAIN AND YOUTH

Diet Secrets of the Rich and Famous

To celebrate the restoration of the magnificent Brewer Fountain on Boston Common, the Young Friends of the Public Garden held its second annual Summer Party at the venerable Union Club, which conveniently boasts a magnificent view of the Common and the Back Bay skyline.

Seen sipping drinks and kibitzing like mad were such sparkly young things as blonde bombshell Samantha Strauss, ubiquitous party animal Charley "Curly" Aldrich, saucy minx Brittany Greenfield, the delightful Nina Lewis-Schroeder and her dapper other half, William, City Hall hottie Jonathan Greeley, the "No-Relation-to-Paris" (thank Gawd) Ryan Hilton, Tucson-bred beauty Lindsay Lightman, brunette blue-blood Molly Storer, windup doll Joshua Janson and his handsome husband, Ben McGuire, the slyly wry David Sebastian Wedemeyer, and one person who made the fatal faux pas of saying, "The food is better at the Somerset Club," within earshot of a waiter.

For the record, the food was delicious, the bartenders attentive, and guests got the added bonus of a magnificent pink and orange sunset seen through double-paned windows, distorting the light to look like a surrealist painting.

Meanwhile, overheard by the bar:

Kissing a female acquaintance hello, one guest said, "Sorry. I just burped beef teriyaki in your face," to which she responded, "Awesome. Maybe if I smell it I won't be hungry, and I'll actually fit into my wedding dress."

Elizabeth Hasselbeck Has the Same Effect On Me

It's tempting to give in to obvious clichés like "monkey business" or "more fun than a barrel of...," so I'll just say that the benefit for Helping Hands—which trains capuchin monkeys to act as assistants to the disabled—was an elegant, enjoyable cocktail party.

The evening, held in the salon at Mistral, attracted the likes of head honcha Megan Talbert, development guru Andrea Rothfelder, arctic blonde heiress Julia Owens, babe-a-licious volunteer and event organizer Lisa Flores, bon vivant Terry Smith squiring the stunning Caraline Zeizel, honest-to-God monkey trainer Alison Payne, petite yummy mummy Wioletta Zywina and her husband, Brian Knez, and numerous equally fabulous others.

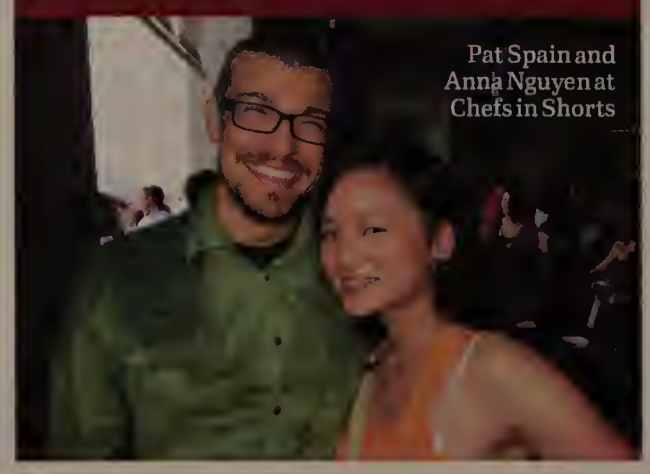
Greg Johnsen and Joanna Prager at the Union Club



Lisa Flores at Helping Hands

Terry Smith and Caraline Zeizel at Helping Hands

William McAdoo and Rachel Cossar at Chefs in Shorts

Pat Spain and Anna Nguyen at Chefs in Shorts

It was a highly edifying affair—who knew capuchins were the smartest New World monkeys?—but the evening's highlight was when a volunteer explained that one monkey-in-training would scream nonstop whenever The View came on TV, to which a guest responded, "Who could blame him?"

Tyin' on the Feedbag

They might consider including a wet T-shirt contest at the annual Chefs in Shorts, so reliably has the weather been uncooperative at Boston's biggest outdoor barbecue.

Not that the rain did anything to dampen people's spirits. More than 30 of the city's top restaurants participated in the chowdown, which raised money for scholarships in the culinary arts, and there's an added camaraderie that comes from getting a bit soggy.

Spotted among the sea of umbrellas: banking smoothie Jean Paulynice, delightful and delicious ballerina Rachel Cossar, TV star and creature hunter Pat Spain and his main squeeze, Bond Girl Anna Nguyen, the mother-daughter duo of Olivia and Isabelle English, expectant parents Emily and Matt Robinson, professional foodie William McAdoo, and so on and so forth.

Everyone gorged on the great eats and ignored the lousy weather, except for one poor woman who was working the party and had gone with the unfortunate wardrobe choice of a white dress with no undergaments, prompting another female to say: "Ew. Total tacofest!"

However, the evening's funniest remark came from the woman who, when asked about resisting caloric temptation, said, "Oh, please. Didn't you hear? My ass just got its own zip code last week." ×××

The IMPROPER

Pants

I've grumbled in the past that I never receive presents that I really want (the island of Bornholm, a partridge in a pear tree, the one, true Ring of Power, etc.). For my birthday this year, however, I got a pair of designer jeans from Saks. I marveled at the pricey denim, wondering what arcane properties made them worth five times the cost of my usual, sag-assed sackcloth. True, they felt stretchy. But I'd scoffed at the whole Jordache craze as a boy, thinking well-cut jeans were something only girls and eunuchs would buy. Real men were too busy writing artful prose and wrestling humpback whales to care about wearing pants.

Adam DeTour

Then I tried them on and realized that designer jeans are great! They're soft, they flatter the buttocks and they pair well with a blazer. The only problem is that once you try them, you need another fix. Hudson is a gateway to 7 For All Mankind, and next thing you know, your credit rating vanishes in a pile of distressed, slim-fit Guccis.

The ancient Greeks, who thought a lot about the fleeting nature of existence, believed that pants were a laughable, Persian effeminacy. Giving a guy a pair, no matter how tasteful, was tantamount to tossing him a maxi pad and a subscription to Cosmo. The moral: Enjoy your jeans while you may. Tomorrow, you'll be mocked. In this issue, Lydia Santangelo's fashions celebrate the strength in this era's feminine looks.

OVER THE MOON

FOR NIRVA Derbekyan's fall collection, inspiration came from the heavens. "I took photographs from dusk going into nightfall," says the Lexington-based fashion designer. "That was my color palette." Derbekyan, who founded her eponymous line six years ago, also sought matching textures. As a result, her autumnal designs feature the sky's deep shades of gray and blue, with splashes of purple and pink for the horizon and ivory for the moon. Woven fabrics imitate the shimmer of stars. "It's a simple idea," she says. "I just thought of sitting outside in the winter—but in something luxurious."

GO WITH THE OVERFLOW

Michael Schmidt and his buddy Michael Dacey have an ideal business relationship. Schmidt, who runs the Bearded Pig, decorates his BBQ joint with Dacey's letterpress artworks. When he needed a meat-free menu option, his vegetarian friend offered a brilliant idea: a mac 'n' cheese sandwich. The rich, squishy result—appropriately named the Dace—is a burger bun packed with elbow macaroni, excellent baked beans and cole slaw. It's a delicious, creative mess. ELIZABETH BOMZE

Tangerine Dream

The buzz around electric orange hues started when Pantone named Tangerine Tango their 2012 Color of the Year. Makeup gurus took notice—Sephora partnered with Pantone to highlight the perky pigment in a full collection of powders, polishes, rouges and even lashes. Katrina Hess, owner of Katrina Hess Makeup Studio on Newbury Street, offers tips for making the most of the season's brightest idea.

PROVOCATIVE POUT: From sheer glosses to matte lipsticks, a mandarin-colored mouth is the simplest way to incorporate the trend into any makeup routine. "It's a shade that works for everybody," says Hess. "But those with fair skin have to go more sheer." A light orange stain with a pink undertone works well for the fair-faced, and a deep, matte color suits medium to dark skin tones.

CHEEKY CHARM: "For the fall season, I would do a nude eye and play it up with the cheek color," says Hess. A light touch is key to pulling off a warm burst of citrus, especially for paler skin. Even redheads can rock this look. "They just have to stick with a pink-coral tone."

LIVELY LIDS: A touch of tangerine shadow brings out hazel undertones in brown eyes and makes blues and greens pop with contrast. Hess suggests blending with cool colors such as gray, dark blue or black and staying away from brown for a subtle look that makes passersby do a double take. TAMARA OMAZIC

LOCAL FLAVOR

News in Newton

TEEMING WITH professionals with expendable income, Newton offers a demographic that's irresistibly appealing to restaurateurs, and at least two noteworthy new businesses are being added to the scene.

Freshly opened is Farmstead Table in Newton Centre. Chef/owner Chad Burns spent six years at Radius, and as the name indicates (and as you've probably already guessed), his focus is on local farms. The 48-seat eatery also keeps things fresh with regular deliveries from Cape Ann fisheries. "I don't know what I'm getting 'til it comes in the front door," says Burns. "It's whatever's local and sustainably caught."

Also on the menu: rib-eye steak with buttery mashed potatoes, roast duck with grilled peaches, and an heirloom gazpacho.

Meanwhile, in Newton Highlands, seasoned chef Jeffrey Fournier of 51 Lincoln has set his sights on opening a new "rustic" restaurant in the former Kouzina space. Waban Kitchen will open in late October with a full liquor license and, of course, an emphasis on fresh and local. "I've always cooked that way," says Fournier, noting that his rooftop garden at 51 Lincoln grows 90 tomato plants. The menu will include Fournier's popular Bolognese, though not his equally noteworthy watermelon steak. Announcing bigger news, Fournier adds, "Our end goal is to have a total of three restaurants in Newton."

A CELEBRATION OF BELGIAN BEER

Best of Belgium

Belgium is renowned for its vibrant and diverse beer culture. A rich tradition of culinary invention and improvisation, combined with centuries of brewing passion and expertise, helped craft a stunning variety of beer styles enjoyed around the world.

Leffe Blonde was first brewed in 1240 by the monks of Abbaye de Notre Dame de Leffe in Belgium. A spicy, faintly clove-like aroma is balanced by Leffe's creamy body and restrained dry finish.

Stella Artois' rich brewing heritage dates back to 1366 in Leuven, Belgium, where it was first brewed to celebrate the holiday season. Traditional malted barley and the highest quality European hops give Stella Artois its full flavor and delicately crisp finish.

Hoegaarden is the Original Belgian Wheat Beer, dating back to the 15th Century. A naturally cloudy beer, Hoegaarden features a secret to its refreshing flavor and spicy nose: real Curaçao orange peel and a dash of coriander.

Always Enjoy Responsibly.

SHOJO 9A Tyler St., Boston (617-423-7888)

First Taste

SAKE TO ME

According to a Japanese legend, the shojo was a half-man/half-monkey that traipsed across the earth in search of a sake river. This month, the search may have ended in Chinatown.

Brian Moy, owner of Shojo, an Asian bar and bistro, has been in the Chinatown restaurant scene for nearly two decades. He's seen the neighborhood evolve, as the expansion of Malden and Quincy drew away its original demographic. That dispersion is exactly why Moy was determined to open his restaurant in the heart of the community. "It's important to keep Chinatown intact," says Moy, who's also the president of the area's business association. "To show the people of Boston that Chinatown has something different to offer."

"WE WANT TO BE IMPROPER."

Moy aims to attract a new crowd by providing a relaxed atmosphere and a menu that's based heavily on local foods, using traditional craft with a modern twist. "There are certain things that Boston is missing on the food and social scene," he says. "We're not going to be serving the food that everyone else is serving." Exemplifying that is the suckling pig bao, which Shojo chef Nick Lee, who comes from the Franklin Café Group, prepares from a whole pig, roasted daily. The starter features suckling pig topped with kimchi, smoked BBQ sauce, shaved cucumber and jalapeño, wrapped in a soft, Asian-style bun. Other menu highlights include herbed duck-fat fries and braised short ribs served with taro mash, Chinese spinach and a star anise sauce. For a sweet finish, Lee offers his take on a dessert tofu, an almond-milk jelly with sake-macerated grapes.

Keeping that sake river flowing, Moy also plans to stock the bar with imported bottles. "We want people to come in to have a good time and enjoy themselves," says Moy. To that end, Shojo's communal tables are removed after dinner to make space for late-night DJs and dancing. "The louder, the better," says Moy. "Even at casual dining places, people are so proper. We want to be improper." Sounds like our kind of place.

HANNAH LOTT-SCHWARTZ

OFF WITH HER HEAD

Brooke Bloom plays the title role in the brash new play Marie Antoinette, presented by the American Repertory Theater at the Loeb Drama Center beginning Sept. 1.

What's it like to inhabit this character?
Aside from being intimidating, she's such a fascinating figure. What we talked about today [in rehearsal] is tabloid culture and celebrity—where we put people up on pedestals and create environments for them to behave a certain way, and then we tear them down. Marie Antoinette was really a victim of a lot of things, but in particular tabloid culture and celebrity. Not that she behaved well all the time, but she wasn't taught any better. She was just a political pawn, especially in France, where queens had no power. But her power was in her ability to be a woman, really. And that was a difficult road for her because her husband wouldn't consummate their marriage for many years. She really rebelled against who she was supposed to be.

Do you demonize her or sympathize?
Hundreds of years later, she's this thing of myth and of rumor and of smear campaigns. So the truth is difficult, but I think it's probably somewhere in between.

Does today's political landscape provide any new context?
Politically, there's this idea of revolution and freedom and structure, and the way things have to change—is it revolution? And is a certain amount of terror necessary for change? It feels really relevant. When I think of the French Revolution, I've always been on the side of the people. This experience is forcing me to be a loyalist, in a way. Not even to take sides, but to notice the horror of both sides, and the way uprising and revolution happen and where they start. All things, even with good intentions, have an element that can get out of hand.

What's your dream role?
This is actually one of those roles for me. I've been into Marie Antoinette since high school when I did a presentation of her. I built a wig and put a ship in it, like she once did. It's funny—my whole life, when I've gotten a role, it's been a gift. It's a little scary with this one because it's a hard life she had. But I'm curious in what ways it will inform me.

Spore for Your Money

A trio of recent college grads started a mushroom business. Sound shady? It is—at least by name. Self-taught cultivator Devin Stehlin teamed up with friends Nate Seyler and Leif Johnson, and the three created Shady Oaks Organics, a Newburyport-based greenhouse operation where they grow shiitake and five varieties of oyster mushrooms. They're still in the startup phase (if you're looking for a small business to pair with your Grey Doves), but their client list is impressive. You may have seen their blushing pink or dainty yellow caps featured at Menton, Beacon Hill Bistro or at your local famers' market. So for your next creative dish, add color with something shady.

Drink of the Moment

BOOZE TRAVELER

NAME: Touristas in the Orient.

PRICE: $11.

INVENTORS: Restaurant manager Jon Mendez and sous chef Juan Pedrosa.

INGREDIENTS: Espolón Reposado tequila, cucumber, yuzu, agave, Thai bird chili, Szechuan peppercorn and cilantro.

TASTE: The cucumber rinses through the front, cooling down the flavor of citrus and agave. Next, hot spice notes clip through the base of tequila before the peppercorns end each sip with a numbing zing.

CHARACTER: Very Graham Greene. This is the sort of drink you can imagine sipping on the verandah of the Peninsula Hong Kong whilst wearing a Panama hat.

CROSS-CULTURAL CRED: Mixing tequila with yuzu and Asian spices is a perfect example of the international-fusion trend. "It's a cultural exchange," says Mendez. "There's the stereotypical Mexican spirit, but it's got all these Asian flavors."

ORIGIN STORY: Mendez was intrigued by the bittersweet citrus taste of yuzu. "I'd used yuzu before, so I knew what paired well with it," says Pedrosa, who hit on the idea of adding the peppercorns and cucumber. "It's got all the tastes: the spice, the savory, the salty, the sweet. The cilantro ties everything together and makes the cucumber pop."

PAIR IT WITH: It's light enough to be an ideal accompaniment to ceviche. But it's also bold enough to stand up to chicken meatballs in garlic sauce or roasted littlenecks.

VERDICT: Mendez truthfully observes, "You just want to keep drinking it."

RINGS OF IRE

TO THE OLYMPIC COMMENTATORS ON NBC: I know you fancied yourselves omniscient narrators of all things London 2012, but the torch is out, and it's time to step off the podium. I couldn't stand the way you nitpicked and criticized the athletes during these games, while they performed feats of strength and skill that you can't (or, if you're a washed-up former Olympian, feats you certainly can't do anymore). Hang up your dusty fame and accolades from the '70s, and leave the commentating to sports professionals who are supportive—hell, even just respectful—of our athletes. Congratulations on your gold-medal performance in Mercilessly Ruining the Olympics for Everyone. It's a competitive field, but something tells me you're a shoo-in for gold in 2016. See you in Rio—I'll be watching on mute. Vexed viewer

To the elderly couple yearning for the days of the Reagan Administration:

First off, I have to ask, what are you doing in Allston? I'm worried you may have wandered away from the herd heading back to the Cape. Should I call for help? Or maybe you're just generational holdouts, kind of like the people that refused to leave the area surrounding the test site for the atomic bomb. I can only assume you're middle-class citizens or, like me, slightly below that economic line. So why are you yearning for the days of Reagan!? His administration squeezed the middle class while making the rich richer and the poor poorer, while maintaining a huge national deficit. But I guess that's what we need right now? I would have rather trusted his monkey costar in Bedtime for Bonzo with our economic future than ol' Gipper. I know, everyone in the '80s was too coked out on keytar riffs to remember what the hell was going on, but for the love of God, go home, start up your dial-up Internet connection, and do just the simplest amount of research. The guy who's happy he isn't your grandchild

To the not-so-subtle "beauty expert":

I understand part of the job description is peddling product like it's bottled water from the fountain of youth, but remarking about my "large pores" isn't going to help you meet your quota. Do I look like the sort of vain, delusional and insecure biddie who'd shell out $40 for 1.5 ounces of creamy chemicals that smell like Walter White's meth lab? Pleased with my pores

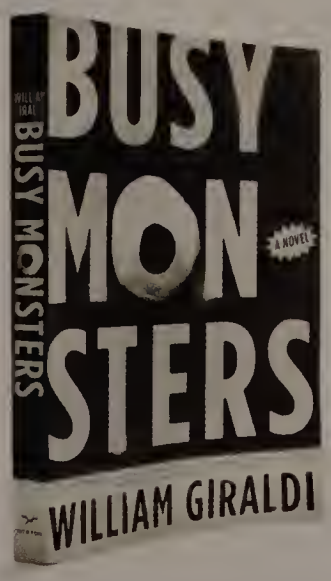
SQUID PRO QUO



A novel of love and shellfish

PUT HERMAN MELVILLE, Kurt Vonnegut and Joseph Heller in a blender, and you get a sense of William Giraldi's narrative style.

In his novel, Charlie pines for Gillian. She's run off with another guy in pursuit of a giant squid, leaving Charlie in a combination of sweet heartbreak and animal hunger to win her back. After an attempt to murder the mollusk man, Charlie winds up in jail.

Paralleling the squid quest, Charlie connects with a wild character who wants to find and kill Bigfoot. Another venture with an ex-girlfriend brings him together with UFO-seekers. Charlie (last name Homar) travels on a roaring odyssey marked by machismo and faithfulness (offered a sex roundelay with two women and a narcissistic bodybuilder, he declines). And when his rejecting father dies, Charlie goes through a peculiar, arid non-mourning in the wake of his passing.

Busy Monsters
by William Giraldi

Giraldi teaches at Boston University.

The wild energy of Giraldi's writing is as adventuresome as Charlie's story. Underneath all the danger is his steadfast affection for Gillian. Eventually, she finds her squid-seeker, well, fishy, and our hero finds his movielike climax at the New England Aquarium. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 90: "My dreams were callous, squid-filled; the fiend had me in his jelly grip, trying to choke the breath from my ribs. A bikinied Gillian had the thing in a bridle and was riding it like a rodeo steed, wearing cowgirl hat and boots, with spurs, I believe. If I had clicked on the TV and scrolled to CNN I would have no doubt seen Gillian and Jacobi at the other end of Anderson Cooper, and this I could not abide. Indecisive, I sat in the sun out back for hours and tried to will the beams into a healing heat, Vitamin D and whatnot."

THE SIMPLE LIFE

Natural refinement at Maine's Hidden Pond

SWING LOW Kick back on the porch of "Thank You," one of Hidden Pond's unique cottages.

BEACH VACATIONS AREN'T white shoes or summer lilies. They shouldn't disappear with the passing of Labor Day, especially since, even without a wetsuit or layer of seal blubber, the waters of coastal Maine can support a weekend dip as late as October. For a last flush of sun, an ideal setting is Hidden Pond in Kennebunkport, a resort conceived as a summer camp for grown-ups, but which also caters expertly to the underaged.

Apparently designed by upscale druids, Hidden Pond's wooded grounds are a mix of birches, pines and luxury amenities, not to mention a Ken Oringer restaurant. Checking in, a guest's first glimpse of the sylvan theme is in the main Lodge's subdued palette, polished woods and plush seating, accented by unfinished branches. A set of French doors opens onto a warm, saltwater pool sized for kids, one shallow enough even for children who haven't learned much buoyancy. A Buddha statue perches at one end to encourage meditative splashing, while cabanas in the garden are perfect for drowsing after a game of tag or Marco Polo. For parents, the adjacent Back Porch Bar has an urbane cocktail menu and stocks local beers, while the Sand Bar Grille serves poolside lunch and kid-palate foods like burgers and pizza. There's also a firepit that hosts one of the resort's central social events, a nightly bonfire supplied with baskets of ingredients for s'mores.

✓ Traveler's Checks

Bike rentals are available next to "the farm," where you're free to pick your own herbs, vegetables or berries.

The energetic will enjoy the morning yoga and fitness classes, as well as guided kayaking, biking and stand-up paddleboarding.

The real culinary draw, though, is Earth, one of the best dining rooms south of Portland. Plenty of restaurants trumpet their farm-to-table credentials, but Earth's tomatoes, green onions and lettuces are grown onsite in the resort's organic gardens. Everything from the shellfish to the cheese is doggedly local; even the walls are built from trees cut for clearing the site. After a dish of handmade maltagliati with crab and sea urchin, take a digestif by the fire next to the adults-only pool, and rest assured that the babysitter supplied by the resort is still on the clock.

The best reason to visit Hidden Pond, though, is the lodging. Couples can opt for bungalow accommodations, but families should book one of the unique two-bedroom cottages ringing the Lodge. "Thank You," for instance, has a summer cabin look, if decked out by a pricey interior designer with connections in the antiques trade. A long enclosed porch sports a two-person swing and vintage artwork; an outdoor shower is stocked with L'Occitane products and, better, a view of the treetops or the stars as you rinse away the day's swim. The full kitchen is handy for cooking snacks purchased from the onsite store (aptly called "Provisions") or serving the breakfast baskets of fruits, yogurts and fresh baked goods delivered every morning to your door. "Stargazer" is a two-story cottage with a natural palette and a bird-and-thistle theme. "Moon Watch" sports a giant compass rose on the ceiling and classic wildlife prints and oil paintings. Were you to pluck up any of these cottages and drop them inside the I-495 ring, you'd send property values skyrocketing in a half-mile radius.

If the pool loses its allure, the staff will drive you the five minutes it takes to reach Goose Rocks Beach, an arc of pale, velvet sand largely devoid of sharp rocks or shells, yielding a safe, splashy ground for sandcastle builders. It's also a restful place for adults to bask before a hot lobster roll and a glass of Chablis across the street at the Tides, Hidden Pond's relentlessly elegant sister property, a hotel of muted beach colors, original art and plush white armchairs overlooking the sea.

Afterward, hop a ride back to the resort for an afternoon at the Tree Spa. Treatments are performed in Spartan, wooden huts reached by gangplanks between the balsams—this is the opposite of the overstuffed city spas that sink you in upholstery and excessive towels. Here it's just you, a table and expert hands. Stepping back out of your hut into the sun-mottled forest, it's obvious that, at Hidden Pond, simplicity is the heart of refinement. ✖✖✖

EAT, DRINK AND BE MERRY Grilled pork with hot cherry peppers will put a smile on your face.

SOME PEOPLE EQUATE flights of whimsy with a lack of seriousness. This can color their opinion of what a talented, sometimes whimsical person can create. That phenomenon surfaced recently in a few of the published criticisms of Happy's, Michael Schlow's newest restaurant. In this reviewer's opinion, Schlow's penultimate creation, Tico, is home to an almost unparalleled variety of flavors. His 13-year-old Radius remains a paradigm of high-end dining. With Happy's, some have stated that Schlow is indulging a nostalgic yearning to an uninspired effect. I believe that with a return to the food of his childhood, one of Boston's best chefs is continuing to grow.

Happy's décor channels its whimsical name, with renderings of movie and TV characters, political graffiti, brightly colored murals and an eclectic array of mismatched seating. Colloquially worded labels like "apps + munchies" belie the clear and generally complete descriptions, although one of my guests was dismayed that the cheese sprinkled over the crunchy meatballs ($9) was not noted on the menu, so as to warn the lactose intolerant. Despite that lapse, the meatballs and their spicy basil sauce made a great starter, moist and flavorful on the inside, with their crusty exteriors providing a textural treat. Almost a dozen plump Buffalo wings ($9) came coated with an assertive glaze, modulated by house-made blue-cheese dressing on the side. Grilled flowerets of chipotle-spiked cauliflower ($8), enhanced by fried fava bean "crunchies," made a strong impression, as did a bowl of deep-fried calamari ($11), tossed Rhode Island style with hot and mild peppers. While tuna tartare with spicy avocado and cucumbers ($13) disappointed in its diminutive size and overly subtle flavor, three shrimp tacos ($9), refreshingly bathed in lime juice, heated with jalapeños and cooled with cucumber, hit the spot.

Charles' Picks

Cauliflower

Fried calamari

Chicken parm

Grilled pork

From the salad offerings we chose two. The combination of shaved mushrooms, cuts of fresh asparagus and peppery arugula sublimely dressed with truffle oil ($9) constituted an extraordinary mix of flavors and aromas. In contrast, and in a stunning rebuttal to the canard "you get what you pay for," the tuna and salmon sashimi salad ($17) provided less than half the satisfaction at nearly twice the price.

Main courses included that most palliative of comfort foods, "old-school chicken parm" ($16). Rich, cheesy sauce coated a row of tender slices of lightly breaded chicken, accompanied by vibrant, al dente broccoli. The fried chicken ($16), overcooked to a dark brown crust with dry flesh within, wasn't in the same league. Grilled skirt steak with salsa verde and fresh, hot fries ($19) got the kitchen back on track. Though rare, rather than medium rare as ordered, the succulent texture made us consider that perhaps our original request had been improvident. A hefty slab of grilled salmon ($21) arrived atop a mound of red quinoa studded with cubes of tomato, cucumber, cilantro and mint. Like the steak, it had been ordered medium rare, which the kitchen construed loosely but to good effect. Finally, the best of the mains, the grilled pork ($19) with hot cherry peppers, sausage and potatoes, was sweet, savory and just spicy enough to stimulate the taste buds without incinerating them.

A good selection of beers, including bottles of Dogfish Head 90 Minute ($6.75)—the Château Pétrus of IPAs—and drafts of Boston's own Harpoon IPA ($4.50) are offered at great prices, while the wine selections were incongruously pricey, with few bottles under $40.

Of the desserts, we should've passed on Pikes Peak ($14.95), a gargantuan bowl of ice cream, whipped cream, buried candy and a brownie, which four of us could not finish. A little house-made strawberry ice cream ($2, one scoop; $6, four scoops) was a merrier, and lighter, send-off. The flavor reminded me of the Awful Awful shakes I was addicted to as a boy in the 1950s.

Nostalgia is a powerful tool in the restaurant business. To some, Happy's calls to childhood may seem childish, but on my visits I found Schlow's commitment of purpose never in doubt. ×××

Boston Medical Center's Catwalk for BMC Cancer Care was held at the State Room on June 28. The fashion show featured creations by seven local designers, modeled by cancer survivors and hospital staff. The event was attended by 400 people and raised $60,000.

The French Cultural Center celebrated Bastille Day with a party on Marlborough Street on July 13. More than 1,800 people jammed the street for music by guitarist Diblo Dibala and the band Sarazino. Meanwhile, 170 VIPs enjoyed a reception at the center's brownstone. The celebration raised $30,000 for cultural and educational programs.

Q: I HAVE BEEN READING THAT RETINOLS ARE GOOD FOR YOUR SKIN. WHAT DO THEY DO?

A: Retinols are pure Vitamin A. Retinol, in the proper formulation, is one of the few substances with a small enough molecular structure to penetrate the outer layers of the skin. It works to repair the lower layers of the skin where collagen and elastin reside. Retinol stimulates cell production creating firmer, smoother skin.

Slow cell regeneration is one reason skin becomes lined and discolored as it matures. Retinol works to increase cell turnover. This natural process slows down as we age, and retinol is the gold standard in ramping up cell renewal to produce smooth, evenly colored, younger-looking skin. If you suffer from acne, retinol works in the same manner and can help control some of the symptoms of acne.

In my opinion, a high-quality retinol should be a part of everybody's skin care regimen. Not all brands of topical retinols are equal; just having retinol listed as an ingredient on the label does not mean that it is the proper concentration or is in the right form to be effective. Try our SkinHealth Advanced Retinol and let me know what you think!

SCARY GOOD

A ghost story with life lessons

Paranorman ★★★½

With the voices of Kodi Smit-McPhee, Tucker Albrizzi, Anna Kendrick, Christopher Mintz-Plasse, Casey Affleck, Leslie Mann, Jeff Garlin and Elaine Stritch. Written by Chris Butler. Directed by Chris Butler and Sam Fell. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

LAST SUMMER, J.J. Abrams and Steven Spielberg made a big deal out of paying homage to old Spielberg movies from the late '70s and early '80s with Super 8. The film was a clunky, retro-cinematic love letter so self-conscious in its karaoke shot selections, it eventually felt suffocating. The screenplay also didn't make much sense, not to mention it was a little gross watching Spielberg participate in a masturbatory tribute to himself.

ParaNorman, the wondrous new stop-motion animated feature from Laika (the studio that brought us Coraline a few years back) doesn't feel like it's trying to replicate the atmosphere of those early Amblin' Entertainment pictures, at least not as strenuously as Abrams did. ParaNorman captures that magic on its own terms. This is a rousing boy's adventure full of big scares, goofy humor and a pointed message. Perhaps the best way to sell you on this picture is to say it's sort of like what The Goonies might've been, had The Goonies been beautifully animated and not terrible.

Kodi Smit-McPhee voices the title character, Norman Babcock, a lonely adolescent with a Chia Pet hairdo who loves watching crummy old horror movies with his grandmother (Elaine Stritch). The only problem is that grandma's been deceased for quite some time. Like Haley Joel Osment in The Sixth Sense, Norman sees dead people, and they're everywhere. The swift economy with which screenwriter Chris Butler, who codirected with Sam Fell, lays out this initial conceit is almost breathtaking, culminating in a gorgeously rendered walk to school during which Norman shoots the breeze with ghosts from nearly every generation. (My favorite was the 1930s gangster in cement shoes.)

> Seeing ParaNorman in 3-D is actually worth the painful surcharge.

Unfortunately, actual living people aren't as interested in Norman's company. He's taunted mercilessly by the school bully (Christopher Mintz-Plasse, thugging up the McLovin-isms) while his parents (Jeff Garlin and Leslie Mann) worry that their kid might need some serious help. Even Norman's ditzy teenage sister Courtney (a very funny Anna Kendrick) thinks he's a weirdo. His only real-life friend is fat goofy Neil (Tucker Albrizzi), who believes wholeheartedly in Norman's supernatural gifts, but maybe that's just because Neil likes the idea of somebody being able to play fetch with his dead dog.

ParaNorman is set in the fictional town of Blithe Hollow, a hilarious stand-in for Salem, where the entire economy revolves around shamelessly marketing centuries-old witch trials in order to sell chintzy collectibles and bumper stickers. Yet, the thing is, there really is a witch haunting Blithe Hollow, and because of some balderdash about a curse and a book, suddenly she's got the dead rising from their graves and roaming the streets. Finally, Norman's gift can come in handy.

It's unfair to reveal too much, as the delight of Butler's screenplay lies in the sharp left turns and unanticipated angles. Safe to say that Norman, Courtney, Neil and Neil's hunky, dim-witted brother (Casey Affleck) end up in a Scooby Doo van pursued by zombies for a few bravura action sequences. But even then, maybe those zombies aren't exactly what they seem at first glance.

That's the tricky, unexpectedly thoughtful thing about ParaNorman. The movie keeps upending your expectations and urging you to look beyond the surface. As we know, witch trials were all about snap judgments and scapegoating, and parallels are played out in the film's increasingly chaotic and surprising second half. ParaNorman eventually becomes a weirdly trenchant laceration of mob mentality. Bullies are everywhere, and in a rare moment of wisdom, dopey Neil points out that if he were only thinner and better looking, he'd probably be a bully, too.

A visual marvel, seeing ParaNorman in 3-D is actually worth the painful surcharge, as these quaint, handcrafted puppets have been seamlessly combined with state-of-the-art CGI to make a movie that looks both cutting edge and antique at the same time. I also loved Butler and Fell's commitment to the Spielbergian technique of shooting scenes from a child's point of view, which means we're eye-level with a lot of pot bellies and fat asses most of the time.

A good deal tougher and more intense than your typical kiddie fare, ParaNorman earns its scares with a progressive message of inclusivity that frankly left this reviewer taken aback. There are a couple of doozy plot twists, and also one throwaway that guarantees the picture will never score a merchandising tie-in deal with Chick-fil-A. It's a gutsy move. Gutsy movie, too. ✖✖✖

LIFELINE

The Fray survives to share stories with renewed passion and purpose

plays the Comcast Center on Aug. 25.

THE MEMBERS OF THE FRAY know the perils of a sudden pedestal. The Denver band grew ubiquitous in the wake of its 2005 debut, How to Save a Life, particularly after the title track graced promos and the TV show Grey's Anatomy. Many critics doubted the staying power of a piano-rooted pop combo, seeing the group as a bland, commercial cousin to Coldplay and Keane. But the Fray has proved them wrong.

"Nobody's gonna turn down a huge turbo thrust at the starting line," says Fray frontman Isaac Slade, 31. "At the same time, you have to get past that no-one's-taking-us-seriously s, like you're some executive's invention."

Slade says he wouldn't be where he is today without having an epiphany on the eve of a 2009 summer tour to promote the Fray's self-titled sophomore album. "I'd basically gotten everything I wanted," the singer says. "I had to figure out why I was doing it. If it was to make everybody like me, that was failing miserably—for every one that liked me, there were three that didn't. If it was to make more money, I had more than I ever needed."

> "I got onstage and started playing shows with that new desperation.... I became a frontman that summer."

That realization to stay honest, he says, "gave this edge to everything, this desperation to my songs." The change first emerged onstage. "That was kinda the breaking point, where I didn't have anything else to lose," explains the singer/pianist. "I got onstage and started playing shows with that new desperation and ditched my piano. I walked forward to the edge of the stage and started yelling, and I became a frontman that summer."

That fresh approach followed three years of touring behind the Fray's debut, which sold two million copies. Despite its success, Slade acknowledges that the record had too many mid-tempo ballads. "They were all kind of headphones-in-the-bedroom songs," he says. "So we were playing to these big crowds with crazy energy, and we didn't have the songs to match it."

With this year's Scars & Stories, the band has grown closer to capturing its live energy in the studio. Produced by Brendan O'Brien, who's worked with Bruce Springsteen and Pearl Jam, the Fray's third album rocks a bit harder. Opening the record is "Heartbeat," a song inspired by Slade's experience in Rwanda, where he felt a woman's blood pumping through her hand. The song's guitar-fueled melody is topped only by the singer's keening falsetto.

Though the Fray's songs still blur into similar-sounding tones at times, the new album suggests a fuller sweep of musical influences. For Slade, that includes Bush, Third Eye Blind and Counting Crows. "All three had this passion and disregard for opinion," he says. "They got lost in what they were saying. It's almost like they wrote this music, and it ate them whole."

He also cites director Steven Spielberg, painter Norman Rockwell and photographer Annie Leibovitz as inspirations. Says Slade, "They always find the story, the pulse and the characters and manage to walk that fine line between art and commerce."

The balancing act has been working for Slade and cowriter/guitarist Joe King, lead guitarist Dave Welsh and drummer Ben Wysocki. With all members reared in the church, the Fray found a Christian-music audience early on, before surging into the secular market, attracting fans who connected with Slade's soul-searching lyrics about relationships. That introspection remains on Scars & Stories.

"I've always wanted to do something that mattered and make some kind of lasting effect more than cash in my bank account," says Slade, who credits his college years working in a Starbucks for shaping his career views. "It was a personal connection with a new customer every two and a half minutes that I thought was the real reason I was there. And to some extent, I feel that's the same thing I do now. Instead of serving coffee, I sing and serve the crowd songs." ×××

BENT, NOT BROKEN

On daring to live differently.

LONERS ARE LUCKY IN MANY ways. For my first five years I lived in my grandfather's house, one child surrounded by five adults who very much believed that children were to be seen but not heard. This forced me to find amusement on my own. And it also forced me to be what I call "bent." Bent is a compliment. It describes people who feel slightly out of sync with their companions, the grit in the oyster, the square peg stuck in the round hole.

Bent people tend to be creative (writers, artists or actors), but they're entrepreneurs as well, appearing in seemingly boring businesses like finance or law. Bent people often mock or defy convention. In the 1970s, George Frazier, a columnist for The Herald and then The Globe, was an admirably bent writer. Frazier skewered anyone and anything he deemed pretentious, overrated or who just didn't measure up to his standards. He trumpeted the writing talents of the young George Higgins and the stories of the older John O'Hara. There's a scene in one of O'Hara's novels in which the hero, self-loathing and contemptuous of "new money," tosses a drink in the face of a loudmouth flaunting his cash and recent membership in the hero's country club.

The '70s were as challenging as today's America; despair in government leadership, 20 percent interest rates, gas lines. "It's over for America, the downhill slide," my clients said. In this period of stress, Frazier wrote a column blasting a pal of mine. After I wrote a satirical note to Frazier, going to bat for my friend, he excoriated me in a subsequent column. In these situations, I tend to go with guerrilla warfare, not turn the other cheek. Frazier lunched often at Locke-Ober. I called the maître d' and asked him, "Next time George Frazier comes to lunch, please call me at my office." I couldn't challenge him to a duel, but like the hero in O'Hara's novel, I planned to go to Locke's, order a long whiskey and soda, and toss it in Frazier's face.

"Not a good idea," said my lawyer friend, also a bent person in many ways. "A lot of things can happen, all of them bad."

The maître d' called one day, and I rushed to the restaurant to find Frazier had just left. I never got another chance, and afterward another bent friend advised me, "Never get in a beef with anyone who buys their ink by the barrel."

My bent women friends tend to be funnier, less dark than the men. One I call "Daring

John D. Spooner is an investment advisor, author and novelist. Contact him at thedance@improper.com.

Jason Dolly

Dora" is a dangerous combination of outrageous and smart. Dora had a brief romantic interlude with a doctor. It ended badly, with Dora thinking that the doctor needed a lesson or two. So she went to the hospital parking lot and put a knitting needle into each of his tires. "Show the colors," Dora told me. "Never be a victim if you can do something about it."

"Boy," I tell her. "I hope you're never mad at me."

"Where do you keep your car?" She asked. "Only kidding."

The bent are loners, but they're eternally searching for love.

Bent women with Boston roots include Barbara Walters, Joan Parker and Pro Football Hall of Fame commentator Lesley Visser. Did I mention that bent people have strong senses of humor? Visser had a great line that she supposedly used with every man she interviewed. At some point in the conversation, she'd stop and say, "Is this the best time you've ever had in your life?" Bent.

Other bent Bostonians over the years include JFK, but not Ted Kennedy, and Kevin White, who assembled talent around him better than any mayor in the city's history. Bill Weld, in my opinion, is bent, and I cannot think of any other governor who fills that bill. Not Deval Patrick, not Michael Dukakis. One of my bent women friends is almost 90 years old. She can't believe it, and neither can I. Just two weeks ago, she came into my office wheeling a shopping cart. In it was a small wooden stool. Strapped to the stool was a stuffed ostrich, its head drooping into a bucket filled with sand. "I haven't looked at a financial statement in years," my friend said. "My head is buried in the sand, like the ostrich."

The bent are loners, but they're loners eternally searching for love. One friend, when I was developing the "bent" thesis long ago, is a collector of art, sails a wooden boat, wrote an 800-page novel about mythical mice and has chased love in all the wrong (and some of the right) places. When the birth control pill was developed in the early 1960s, and the sexual revolution was hard on its heels, my bent friend had been married for a few years. He called me one day, highly annoyed at the changes in society. "I'm beyond pissed," he said.

"What's wrong?"

"The world is two billion years old," he said. "And I was born five years too soon."

Have some bent people in your life. They make your days compelling, and in even the worst case, you'll have some laughs. ✖✖✖

Ez Sez {EZRA DYER}

DAMAGE CONTROL

Chick-fil-A isn't the only company with an image problem.

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

WE AT EZRARIFFIC Industries would like to clarify the statements that recently appeared in an interview with our company's CEO, Mr. Ezra Dyer. Those statements reflect Mr. Dyer's opinions and are not necessarily the positions of Ezrariffic Productions, E-Riffic Worldwide International or any of its subsidiaries (Tastee Dragon Fortune Cookie Paper, Tuber-'N'-Luber French Fries and 15-minute Oil Changes, and Smokey Robinson's Tears of a Clown Eye Drops).

During last week's interview, Mr. Dyer stated that people with beards "should be rounded up and shaved. Every time a guy orders an artisanal cocktail with hand-chipped ice, he should get a Gillette Fusion to stir it with, until we no longer look like a bunch of damn ZZ Top lumberjacks up in here." Our corporation appreciates the business of our hirsute customers and will continue to serve them with courtesy and respect, as exemplified by the new hate-free zones in our retail locations, where both customers and employees will be prohibited from making Grizzly Adams references or using offensive terms such as "flavor-saver."

After Mr. Dyer's beard comment—in fact in the very next sentence—he made statements that may have been interpreted as defamatory to another North American minority group, Canadians. The ensuing boycott by the American Association of Canadians was keenly felt. As a company, we do not believe that Canadians "come here and take all our hockey jobs and run around all hopped up on the maple syrup." In fact, many of our own employees are Canadian-American, and as such are exempt from the corporate no-headgear policy, so they may work in peace while wearing their traditional Mountie hats. To demonstrate our tolerance, maple syrup is now dispensed in our restrooms, since it is our understanding that Canadians like to wash their hands in it.

Next, we'd like to apologize to Roomba vacuum cleaners. We understand that they work OK, actually, on a wood floor or a carpet with a very low nap. You know, so long as you don't have pets. For Mr. Dyer to say that Roombas are "as useful as a sick kitten" was uncalled for. In fact, a Roomba is more like a promising child who never lives up to his or her full potential. We'd just like to get this apology on the record, in preparation for the day when Roombas become sentient. Remember, we seek only peace.

Later in the interview, our CEO also made statements hurtful to fans of dubstep, which he called, "the first genre of music whose only creative goal is to annoy your parents." He then added, "Why don't I just come over to your house and play Atari 2600 with the TV turned up really loud?" Over pleas that he stop talking, Mr. Dyer continued, "Remember the guy from Police Academy who could make all the crazy noises with his mouth? He could just go 'bleep bloop blomp waaa waaa waaa' and be the top dubstep DJ in the world."

We understand that these statements led to an unnecessary public controversy which drew attention away from our company's core products and mission, and also incited Skrillex to write a protest song called "Bleep Bleep Ga-na-na-na Fzzzzzzz." Please understand that on a corporate level, we embrace fans of all types of music, even those who still choose to dress up like Kiss.

Hopefully, by now, you understand that our CEO is an outspoken individual whose personal views aren't always in synch with our corporate positions. So we'll just bundle up one collective apology to the following groups: people who draw out the word "awkward," people who post nothing but political stuff on Facebook, men who wear skinny jeans and people who reconstruct their pre-security-screening travel ensembles right there on the other side of the X-ray machine. As Mr. Dyer pointed out, that's what those benches are for, only 20 feet away. But he didn't have to call you the name that he did, the first part of which rhymes with "bird" and the second part of which is "face." The ensuing firestorm of protests crippled our operations at several locations, as doors were blocked by people holding a laptop and wearing one shoe and half a belt.

Of course, we all wish our CEO could go back in time and decline that now-infamous interview with Wooden Boat Magazine. But all we can do is move forward, providing products and services that improve the quality of life for the American people. We hope you'll keep patronizing our business, whether you're looking for low-asbestos cigarettes, Snake-Brake python leashes or Muzzle Charms decorative gun-barrel stoppers. As for our CEO, he'll be refraining from public interviews from now on, although you can still follow him on Twitter @ImmigrantsAreRuiningAmerica. Happy shopping! ✖✖✖

ON SOX DRAMA AND PATS PROMISE

HEY, MR. HENRY
FYI: Bobby V is being mean :(Can u, Tom and Larry meet w players in NY to discuss? Just a few requests: We'd like meeting 2 b catered. Nothing crazy. 1 keg. Good beer. And bottled water (Fiji). Maybe steak dinners and new headphones for team? If you come through, I promise more HRs! lol :P

DEAR, MR. SELIG
Been meaning 2 talk to u RE: schedule... 162 games? Too many! Was thinking maybe 100 would be better. Also, we play 2 many games at night! Afternoon only, plz. And not much on the weekends. :o) Thx!

5 RED SOX PROBLEMS

SILENT KILLER The taciturn Gonzalez got his point across.

Up First, Larry Lucchino He makes the decisions. He's the backbone of this culture. He's the guy who turned Fenway and "Red Sox Nation" into a perverted fantasyland. He's the one who teamed Bobby Valentine with a GM who didn't want him, a coaching staff that didn't like him and set this whole train wreck in motion. Much love for 2004 and 2007, but it's time for Larry to say good-bye—and take a truckload of unsold commemorative bricks with him.

Batting Second John Henry! He's the only one capable of holding Lucchino accountable, yet he still refuses to do the right thing. Maybe it's because he's too busy with other ventures, maybe his relationship with L.L. is fogging things up, but either way, Henry needs to sell out his president or just sell the team. Also, he needs to quit conducting all his interviews over e-mail. He's the owner, not our pen pal.

In the Third Spot The players! All of them. Sure, they've been enabled from above, but come on, they're not 10-year-olds. They're not little puppies. They're adult multimillionaires, and nothing will change until some of them are sent packing. Honestly, at this point, I'd trade anyone but Alfredo Aceves (for fear of what he might do after getting the news).

At Cleanup Mr. Robert Valentine. On one hand, Bobby never got a fair crack. But he also didn't do himself any favors. Valentine's like the fourth driver in a 10-car pileup. He didn't cause the accident, but he certainly played a part in making things worse than necessary. On the bright side, four months into the season, and I think he's finally learned all the players' names.

Last, but not Least The media. Some reporters look the other way on the big issues. Others make far too big of a deal about the small ones. It'd be so refreshing if everyone could just meet in the middle, but that's not the way we do things around here. Crash and burn, baby! All I can say is: Thank God for the Pats.

3 Preseason Points

Mr. Jones The early returns on Chandler Jones are so inspiring that I'm already worried something bad might happen. I mean, is it possible that he's this good? I know, I know. This is all insanely premature. But Jones showed flashes during that first preseason game that I haven't seen around here since I traded Jevon Kearse to the Pats in Madden '01.

Zebras Wanted So it looks like the referee lockout is going to drag on into the season, which is bad news for the NFL. It'll hurt the integrity of the game, and it could affect the outcome of the entire season. Worst of all? No Ed Hochuli. What good is the NFL if it doesn't come with two tickets to Easy Ed's Gun Show?

OchoStinko As the saying goes: "Happy wife, happy life." But what about certifiably insane wife? OK, I don't want to make light of the alleged altercation between Chad Johnson and Evelyn Lozada, but no one's surprised that their marriage ended in disaster. On the other hand, I am surprised that it only took 41 days for them to get divorced. (I had 48 in the pool.)

4 DATES TO WATCH

8/27: The U.S. Open kicks off in Flushing Meadows, N.Y. Be careful if you're eating one of those messy hot fudge sundaes. The cameras pick up everything. (Co-stan-za.)

8/28: The Sox leave for a nine-game West Coast road trip. Toothbrush? Check. Deodorant? Check. Rolodex of national reporters in case you want to spontaneously blast Bobby V.? Check.

8/29: The good news: It's the last preseason game! The bad news: It's versus the Giants. Stay tuned for a steady loop of Tyree catches, Welker drops and swallowing mouthfuls of your own vomit.

9/4: Time to put the women and children to bed and start looking for dinner, boys. Just kidding. Put yourselves to bed, too. The NFL starts tomorrow!

ONE FAREWELL
Anyone who's read this column over the years knows about my love for Johnny Pesky—a man who I still think could've outpitched Josh Beckett this year if he'd been given the chance. RIP, Johnny. Thanks for your years and years... and years of dedication to the Sox.

"I needed to sing

Soroff On PAULA COLE

The singer/songwriter tells us about the music biz, Dawson's Creek and learning how to polka.

GRAMMY-WINNER AND SEVEN-TIME NOMINEE PAULA COLE, 44, was born and raised in Rockport. After attending Rockport High School, she studied jazz vocals and improvisation on a scholarship at Berklee College of Music. Her single "Where Have All the Cowboys Gone" was a Billboard Hot 100 hit in 1997, and in 1998, the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences named her best new artist. Her single "I Don't Want to Wait" became the theme song of the popular TV series Dawson's Creek. In the past 18 years, she's released six solo albums, selling approximately three million copies, and she's collaborated with artists ranging from Peter Gabriel to Dolly Parton. She currently teaches, gives clinics and continues to perform extensively, as well as participate in projects like the student-penned Back to the Garden: The Artistry of Joni Mitchell at Berklee. She lives with her daughter in Rockport.

Jonathan Soroff: So where have all the cowboys gone?
Paula Cole: You've got to be kidding me. I can't believe I'm 44, and you're asking me that question. I haven't been asked that question since the late '90s, and I went into hiding because I was traumatized. [Laughs.] It's rhetorical!

OK, you grew up in a musical family. How many instruments do you play?
A few. I play piano, and I sing well, but the rest I play badly. I'm not a natural guitar player. My left hand just lacks the motor skill. I have rhythm and harmony, so I can make things work. I play clarinet, but it's very rudimentary.

You studied jazz singing and improvisation.
Yup. I started out as a jazz singer in Boston.

Can you rap?
[Laughs.] Not off the cuff. But I have rhythm, so I can speak in rhythm with a nice feel. I did a little bit on my Amen album.

Your dad was a polka musician?
My dad played bass in a polka band that was, ironically, successful, which is unheard of. It was called Johnny Prytko and the Connecticut Hi-Tones. They had albums, and I grew up seeing my dad on album covers, and they played gigs all over. He played every instrument. He's way more musical than I am.

Can you do the polka?
Yeah. I'd stand on my dad's shoes as a kid, and he'd dance me around the kitchen, teaching me how to polka.

You turned down a music contract from a jazz label when you were starting out. Why?
Because I didn't want to be singing other people's songs. I was in my early 20s, at the beginning of my warrior path, and I needed to sing my truth. I didn't want to sing about "a woman's born to weep and fret and tend her oven." I didn't want to be pigeonholed. And maybe that was a mistake. But I do feel that I will make a jazz album someday.

Did Dawson's Creek help or harm your career?
Both. It helped because it's a song for a generation, and it bumped it up to a level that I never imagined. Therefore, the song is what people know. They don't know me. But I retreated from marketing and branding. That whole big shiny career was ill-fitting for an introvert like myself.

Favorite lyric or song you ever wrote?
In "I Don't Want to Wait," the lyric "seeing the love in every eye." I was very influenced by Bob Marley in my writing, and I think that's where that comes from. I love that phrase.

Current favorite singer/songwriter?
I'm always late to the party in discovering new talent. I'm a mother, and I'm busy, and I'm a bit hermetic. But I love Amy Lee, and I think she's going somewhere. There's a very talented singer there. And I just recently discovered Lucy Kaplansky. She has a Ph.D. in clinical psychology. She's a mom, like me. She's highly intelligent, and I think her writing is really special.

What's on heaviest rotation on your iPod?
Joni Mitchell, Lucy Kaplansky, early Nat King Cole, a lot of jazz. It's all over the place.

Billie Holiday or Sarah Vaughan?
Oh, brutal. I'll have to say Billie, because she's so inside the lyric it becomes poetic. I feel Sarah is thinking more about the notes, and Billie lives inside the sadness.

If you could collaborate with anyone, dead or alive, who would it be?
One of those dreams came true. Dolly Parton and I were in the studio together. It would be really cool to write a song with Keith Richards.

What was touring with the Lilith Fair like?
That's a can of worms. It was brilliant at first. Then it became Sarah [McLachlan]'s vehicle. I liked the audiences and the donations we made to women's organizations. There was a very positive energy.

Is the music business sexist?
It's easy to say yes, but you could also say it's ageist. I think the fact is that it's just really damn hard. It's hard for men, too.

Where do you keep your Grammy?
It makes a good bookend, so it's in the library, kind of out of the way. It's not a big deal.

How would you describe your voice?
Full of wisdom and sorrow and joy.

What's your favorite cover of one of your songs?
It was pretty cool to have Annie Lennox and Herbie Hancock do "Hush, Hush, Hush." They're both idols of mine.

Do you prefer recording or performing in front of a live audience?
That's yin and yang. I need both. Recording is very internal and private. Going out to perform is so electrifying. I can't live without both.

Last question: Do you still have a nose ring?
I let it close. I was starting to lose the ability to scrunch my nose up and do the Bewitched thing, so the ring had to go. ✖✖✖

HALO, THERE

PLUMP WITH ITALIAN cuisine, song and dance, St. Anthony's Feast gives visitors a taste of la bella vita.

Fill up on crunchy calamari and creamy cannoli from more than 100 stands and a culinary stage fired up by food stars like Mary Ann Esposito. Then dance it off with music by La Bande Itamia and others or catch some belly laughs with the Saturday night set from comedian Marc Antonio. But take it easy on the Peroni lest you miss the statue of St. Anthony parading the streets, followed by marching bands, floats and confetti. Carbo-load Aug. 24–26 in Boston's North End.

ALEXIS CHENEY

St. Anthony's Feast takes place on Aug. 24 at 7 pm, Aug. 25 at 12 pm and Aug. 26 at 10:30 am at Endicott, Thatcher and North Margin streets in the North End (617-723-8669) stanthonysfeast.com.

Fro Down Diane Paulus' The Donkey Show electrifies A Midsummer Night's Dream with disco flair. Feather boas and mirror balls turn the Bard's enchanted forest into a dance club where fairies are go-go dancers, and Puck is a drug pusher. Tunes of the time narrate the twisted story, sparking the audience to rethink classic lyrics and dance like they haven't in years. The stocked bar and open stage helps seal partygoers into the fantasy. The Donkey Show runs Saturdays at Oberon at 7:30 and 10 pm. Alexis Cheney

The Amazing Spider-Man ★ ½ It's déjà vu all over again in this lazy, rote retelling of the web slinger's origin story, rebooted a mere 10 years since Sam Raimi's effervescent adaptation for the sole purpose of allowing Sony to keep the movie rights. That's correct, it's a film that exists only as contract extension, and this two-and-a-half hour slog feels as inspired as that sounds. The Social Network's Andrew Garfield pouts and poses, as the title role has been recast as a somber Twilight-type haunted by his missing parents (who are teased to figure prominently in a sequel that's scheduled to hit theaters in 2014). That's the rub with modern franchise filmmaking: Everybody's too busy planning for subsequent installments that they forget to tell a coherent story in the first. Director Marc Webb has no sense of pacing or visual bravado, and the movie often grinds to a halt on curiously empty NYC streets. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Avengers ★★★ It was a rough takeoff. After five movies of buildup, the often crummy (see Thor, Iron Man 2, The Incredible Hulk) but occasionally wonderful (Captain America: The First Avenger) Marvel Films' strategy of building a bridge to nowhere at last pays off with a rock 'em, sock 'em, superhero spectacular, in which Earth's mightiest heroes team up to take on an alien invasion in midtown Manhattan. Playing out like a fanboy's nocturnal emission, we finally get to see what would happen if Iron Man fought Thor. But what makes the picture click is writer/director Joss Whedon's knack for snappy banter, as he supplies killer one-liners to Robert Downey Jr.'s debauched Tony Stark and plays to the fissure between Mark Ruffalo's laid-back line readings and his gigantic green alter ego. Massively scaled, coldly impersonal set pieces abound, but the character interactions zing. Whedon isn't much of an action director, but he's gifted with an overqualified cast and allows them to quip away to their hearts' content. (In the suburbs.)

Beasts of the Southern Wild ★★★★ This Sundance sensation is one of the most poignant things I've ever seen. A portrait of a poor New Orleans community bracing for Hurricane Katrina, Beasts of the Southern Wild is so infused with fanciful flourishes that most of the time it feels like Days of Heaven by way of The Road Warrior. Young Quvenzhané Wallis stars as six-year-old Hushpuppy, who lives with her alcoholic father (Dwight Henry) in a junkyard community called the Bathtub. Director Benh Zeitlin drops us into this world with no explanation, and it may take a while to adjust to the harsh environment and oddball speech patterns. Oh, and there are also recently unfrozen, prehistoric aurochs roaming through the proceedings. It's a purposefully abstract piece, never a movie about "poverty" or "Katrina," but about something much harder to pin down. Eventually, it all comes down to Hushpuppy's indomitable spirit and a final shot that sends you soaring out of the theater. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Bourne Legacy ★ In 2007, Matt Damon and director Paul Greengrass brought amnesiac assassin Jason Bourne home to New York City with a smashing finale to a trilogy that only got better as it went along. Five years later, for no discernible reason other than a quick buck, series screenwriter Tony Gilroy cashes in with a superfluous franchise reboot, starring Jeremy Renner because classy Matt Damon wouldn't touch this garbage with a 10-foot pole. Renner stars as a chemically enhanced soldier targeted for elimination by the same old gang of white guys in front of computer screens. The catch is, Renner needs to find some more government-issued smart pills, otherwise, this superspy becomes super dumb. Call it Code Name: Algernon. The pacing is dead, and the structure is a disaster, as the story introduces an antagonist in the final reel—during a climactic chase—that would've arrived 40 minutes into any competent movie. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Celeste and Jesse Forever ★★ ½ Considering it's one of those vanity projects in which TV actors try to break into film by making a Sundance entry about the relationships of well-off urbanites, Rashida Jones' screenwriting debut isn't half bad. Or at least it's agreeable in that mode of movies that rip off When Harry Met Sally in the way When Harry Met Sally ripped off Annie Hall. Jones stars as a high-strung PR type who recently divorced her longtime sweetheart (Andy Samberg) even though they've remained best friends, and he still bums around in the guesthouse. It's clear their chummy arrangement has kept them from moving on, at least until the plot contrives to have him deal with accidental fatherhood after a fling. The kicker is that sometimes people grow into the person you always wanted them to be after your time together is over—a melancholy conceit that this affable, sitcom-y picture doesn't quite figure out how to handle. (In the suburbs.)

Hope Springs ★★ ½ Tommy Lee Jones' rumpled poker face gets one hell of a workout in this almost-decent tale of marriage counseling by The Devil Wears Prada director David Frankel. Meryl Streep stars as a sexually frustrated housewife who signs herself and her hubby (Jones) up for intensive couples therapy in a Maine resort town. Steve Carell plays the shrink dead straight, smartly allowing questions about companionship and sex to ricochet off Streep's and Jones' sublime reaction shots. More melancholy than expected, Hope Springs wonders what happens when the thrill is gone. The movie takes the unfulfilled libidos of its AARP couple seriously, and it's unusual to see such frankness regarding characters of a certain age. (Meryl Streep gives oral? In a movie theater?) Unfortunately, Frankel is still a terrible filmmaker, and he slathers the soundtrack with a catalog

Dogfight

Murderer's Row Revisit Mr. Blond, Mr. Brown, Mr. White and the rest of the color-coded crew from 1992's Reservoir Dogs. In Quentin Tarantino's debut feature, a gang of philosophical and foulmouthed criminals gets together for a heist that leaps violently off the rails. In the aftermath, there're lies, guns and a famous ear-slicing scene. (Though the action takes place offscreen, you may still find yourself covering your eyes.) The bullets fly on Aug. 27 at the Coolidge Corner Theatre, so suit up. Julia Grasso of overplayed pop standards and resorts to a hokey montage every 10 minutes or so. Streep is predictably marvelous, but Jones' gruff, deadpan bleats steal the picture. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Killer Joe ★★★★ Director William Friedkin's NC-17 adaptation of Tracy Letts' play is a go-for-broke outrage. It's visceral and sadistic, yet has a fiendish sense of humor about its fundamental depravity. This Texas trailer-trash tragicomedy stars Emile Hirsch as a two-bit coke dealer who hires the title character (an extraordinary Matthew McConaughey) to knock off his deadbeat mom for a pittance of an insurance policy. Unfortunately, he has no front money, so Joe agrees to accept the kid's addled, virginal sister (Juno Temple) as "a retainer." If you're thinking that this family deserves every horrible thing they have coming, you're probably right, and there's an air of divine retribution to the proceedings. But what makes Killer Joe so audacious is how brazenly Friedkin and Letts muck with audience expectations, shoving that very bloodlust back in our faces. I'm still shocked this movie even exists. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Magic Mike ★★★ ½ Director Steven Soderbergh's sideways take on Channing Tatum's origin story finds pathos beneath the beefcake. Inspired more by Saturday Night Fever than The Full Monty, it gyrates comfortably alongside Soderbergh's The Girlfriend Experience as a detached portrait of sex workers in a floundering economy. Tatum's goofy, aging stripper is suddenly forced to reevaluate a life of go-nowhere day jobs and boogie nights once he recruits the Kid (Alex Pettyfer) into his backstage world of manscaped pelvic thrusts. There are threesomes and drugs. But, as usual, Soderbergh eyes it all with clinical reserve, aiming for a painterly sociological study of a cash-only subculture living for the moment, because tomorrow is something that requires equity and an acceptance that dangles beyond the characters' grasps. Lording over them all is Matthew McConaughey

Michael Gibson

Dodge a Bullet

in a showstopping turn as the slightly sinister, self-parodying club owner whose delusional grandeur suggests a bare-chested Mephistopheles. Between bumps and grinds, the film has a lot to say about class structure in America today. (In the suburbs.)

Moonrise Kingdom ★★★★ Director Wes Anderson's dollhouse sets and Peanuts costumes can sometimes distract from the pathos and heartbreak lurking beneath the surface of his twee tales of damaged men who refuse to grow up. While Moonrise Kingdom is Anderson's most meticulously designed picture, it's also his most emotionally accessible. Riffing on the young-lovers-on-the-lam genre (with plenty of shout-outs to Badlands and Pierrot Le Fou), the film finds star-crossed 12-year-olds running away from home on the fictional New England island of New Penzance during the summer of 1965. The adults in pursuit are a classically broken bunch, with Edward Norton as a scoutmaster out of his league, Bill Murray as a cuckold in denial and the pitch-perfect Bruce Willis as a heartbroken cop called "the sad dumb policeman" behind his back. Shot in gorgeously grainy Super 16mm, Moonrise Kingdom alternates between the flush of first love and the ache of middle-aged compromise. Just lovely. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

The Queen of Versailles ★★★ ½ Originally intended as a snickering portrait of the grotesquely wealthy David and Jackie Siegel's quest to build the biggest, tackiest homestead in the history of real estate, director Lauren Greenfield's research lucked into a recession, and the economic collapse transformed a bit of reality-show lookie-loo into a strangely empathetic depiction of what happens when billionaires are suddenly forced to live like mere millionaires. Once, Siegel was the nation's most successful Florida time-share hustler, selling dreams of luxury to those who could barely afford them. But the chickens come home to roost with a vengeance after 2008's Wall Street disaster, and his adorably dim-witted trophy wife, Jackie, with breasts inflated to the size of basketballs, never quite grasps the enormity of the cataclysm. You can tell how much time has gone by in this picture by the amount of dog crap littering the carpet, as the couple's absurd manse lapses into decay. Their plight becomes America's writ large, except more tasteless. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton Cinema.)

Savages ★★★ Oliver Stone's scattergun satire hits more often than it misses in this nasty little number, which adapts Don Winslow's novel into a take-no-prisoners attack on the futility of the war on drugs. Blake Lively offers up some presumably deliberate awful narration as a vacuous beach bum frolicking in a blissful ménage a trois with marijuana entrepreneurs played by Aaron Johnson and Taylor Kitsch. But there's trouble in paradise when Mexico's Baja cartel comes calling, here led by Salma Hayek in a Bettie Page wig. Johnson and Lively are deadweights on the narrative, but Savages springs to life in the margins. There's a grotesque turn by Benicio Del Toro as a shifty enforcer prone to sickly comic flourishes, and a paunchy, balding John Travolta delivers his best performance in years as a wormy DEA agent attempting to play both sides against the middle. Savages is lurid, violent and occasionally silly. It's also gutsy, rousing and electric. (In the suburbs.)

Ted ★★ ½ Much like writer/director Seth MacFarlane's animated-TV shows, Ted is hysterical, until all of a sudden it isn't anymore. As most comedies these days revolve around man-children refusing to grow up, give MacFarlane credit for taking the gag to its logical conclusion and casting Mark Wahlberg as a 30-something who can't let go of his teddy bear. That the stuffed animal is a walking, talking drug user is only half of the joke. Seeking to settle down with his girlfriend, played by Mila Kunis—who unfortunately is presented as the same tired scold we see in most films in which women aren't allowed to be funny—Wahlberg's dopey meathead routine is a brilliant match for a perverted bear. Like all MacFarlane comedies, Ted leans mainly on non sequiturs and pop-culture references. His jokes rely on recognition, not wit. Still, it's all amusing for an hour or so, until it decides to have a plot. The third act is just stuffing. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

To Rome With Love ★★ ½ Last year's Midnight in Paris was profound in a breezy way. To Rome With Love is just plain breezy, but I didn't mind. Charming, second-tier Woody Allen, the film is a mashup of four disconnected shorts. (The picture sometimes feels as though Allen was rifling through his desk and came across some unfinished New Yorker pieces and decided to fashion them after the Italian omnibus films of the 1960s.) It's good to see Allen back on screen, kvetching and complaining his way through a Roman holiday when he discovers a brilliant opera singer who can only perform in the shower. There's some silliness with Roberto Benigni as an everyman who becomes inexplicably famous, and some bawdy jokes by Penélope Cruz as one of Allen's genius prostitutes. Best in show goes to Alec Baldwin as an aging architect revisiting his wayward youth and watching a younger version of himself make all the same mistakes. Clumsily stitched together, To Rome With Love is a trifle, but it's an agreeable one. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Total Recall ★ ½ The punch line to director Len Wiseman's pointless remake of Arnold Schwarzenegger's campy 1990 gorefest is that you'll have forgotten most of it before you even get out of the parking lot. That's kind of sad when your movie is supposed to be about memories. Colin Farrell blands down his livewire tendencies as the dull Douglas Quaid, a workaday prole in a dystopian future who signs up for a fake-memory head trip. Suddenly, he's a secret agent saving the world! Paul Verhoeven's original (very freely adapted from a Philip K. Dick short story) was no masterpiece, but at least it teased us with the idea that what we were watching might be just Quaid's fantasy. At least that approach almost explained away all the lurid, hyper-sexualized violence. Wiseman leaves no room for ambiguity, and his bloodless, PG-13 action sequences barely even register on-screen. It's a stiff, enervating film. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

2 Days in New York ★★★ With Before Sunrise and Before Sunset and now this follow-up to her 2007 directorial debut, 2 Days in Paris, Julie Delpy may be the only person making sequels to romantic comedies. Judging from the goofy, effervescent results, maybe she's the only person who should be allowed to. Having ditched the tiresome Adam Goldberg sometime in between the two pictures, Delpy's endearingly neurotic photographer now finds herself settled down with a buttoned-up public radio host played by Chris Rock. But their domestic tranquility is shattered by a visit from her nutzoid family, with Delpy's real-life father, Albert, once again reprising his role as her horny, ill-mannered old man. There's also a slatternly sister with a sleazebag old boyfriend in tow, yet what's funniest about the movie is Rock's counterintuitive turn as the straight man. He's got some delightful slow-burns here, often only confessing his exasperation to a cardboard cut-out of Barack Obama. It's an extremely silly confection, but I fell for it. (In the suburbs.)

Barry Wetcher

Jonesing for a Fix

Winning Streep

Tommy Lee Jones and Meryl Streep play a married couple looking to reignite their romance in Hope Springs.

The Watch ★ ½ Slogging through overfamiliar riffs and persistent product placements at a pace that could generously be described as lethargic, this slob-comedy may not be the worst movie of the summer, but it's definitely the laziest. Ben Stiller recycles his uptight nudnik routine for the umpteenth time as a dorky Costco manager who starts a neighborhood watch in his stuffy suburb. Vince Vaughn phones in the loudmouth shtick and signs up for the cause as an excuse to get away from his wife. Jonah Hill joins the gang as a psychotic gun-nut who keeps an arsenal in his bedroom and just wants to shoot people. (Not sure if this was ever funny, but it obviously isn't right now.) Turns out some extraterrestrials are attacking, but the movie is too half-assed to do anything with the twist besides let the actors stand in front of drab surroundings improvising extra helpings of profanity until scenes run twice as long as necessary. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Music Edited by Hannah Lott-Schwartz

Late Bloomer

Suddenly Spotlit Brendan James didn't always want to be a performer. It wasn't until college when he realized that music was his future, learning piano on the fly, and writing lyrics from behind electric keyboards and ballroom ivories. Nine years later, the singer/songwriter released his third album, Hope in Transition, which fuses R&B, pop and rock, and was inspired by his struggles with the industry and gratitude toward his fans. Feel the love at Cafe 939 on Aug. 24. Brigid Wright

Current Events

Ripped From the Headlines

In his three-dimensional structures, Massachusetts native Robert Maloney contemplates urban landscapes and contemporary advertising. He uses rusty pipes, subdued primary tones and newspaper print to evoke an energetic city in transition. The movement of a bustling metropolis remains ambiguous, as the renderings straddle the line between being built up and torn down. Maloney joins nine other local artists for the group exhibit Current: Space, Energy and Time, exploring themes of vitality in art and modern life. See the collection at the Kingston Gallery through Sept. 1.

Crown Roast

Feast for a King

Honey-spiced locusts and cream swans are just two dishes from more than 100 recipes covering every palate across the Seven Kingdoms. While the show Game of Thrones may treat your senses with fantastical scores, sword fights and scantily clad women, Chelsea Monroe-Cassel and Sariann Lehrer tackle your taste buds with their companion cookbook, A Feast of Ice and Fire. Their delicacies are organized by region and manage to combine narrative accuracy with modern-day ingredients, making a theme dinner easier for those less inclined to stock the fridge with camel meat or dragon eggs. Monroe-Cassel and Lehrer storm Porter Square Books on Aug. 23.

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

BISTRO DU MIDI [272 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-426-7878, bistrodumidi.com] Bistro du Midi showcases authentic Provencal cuisine in a warm, welcoming, and beautiful setting. Inspired by the ingredients and culinary techniques of the Midi region in France, Executive Chef, Robert Sisca presents modern, ingredient-driven creations that are at once refined and approachable. From a carefully conceived charcuterie selection to the freshest seafood, meats and vegetables, Bistro du Midi brings the simple, clean and bold flavors of Provence to Boston.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

THE PURPLE SHAMROCK [1 Union Street, Boston, 617-227-2060, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the freedom trail across from Boston City Hall on Union Street. The Purple Shamrock is the perfect place to stop by and have a bite to eat. The fare is composed of New England specialties with burgers, sandwiches, hearty pastas, fresh seafood, tender steaks and other great favorites. Let's not forget their infamous Shamrock Brunch served every Saturday and Sunday that is often paired with live music. After dark, The Purple Shamrock has nightly entertainment with a mix of live music, karaoke and DJ's. At The Purple Shamrock there is something for everyone.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

Beer Specialty

Billiards

BIG CITY Pool hall, Pizza Kitchen, Beer Bar [138 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-782-2020, allstonsfinest.com] Big City is going Mexican. Come see our new renovation and the soon to be Patrons Mexican Kitchen & Watering Hole.

BRUNCH

THE BILTMORE BAR & GRILL [1205 Chestnut Street, Newton, 617-527-2550, thebiltmoregrill.com] Opened at the start of Prohibition, the Biltmore started out as a speakeasy and has been a neighborhood favorite in Newton's historic Upper Falls ever since. Brunch is served Saturday, Sunday and Monday holidays featuring creative menu items such as Huevos Tacos, Sausage Fritter Sandwich and Biltmore's famous Chicken & Waffles. Brunch libations such as the Danish Bloody Mary and Red Beer (The Cure!) help ease your way into the day.

LOCAL 149 [149 P Street, South Boston, 617-269-0900, local149.com] A neighborhood joint in South Boston's Citypoint, Local 149 offers historic roots and lots of heart & soul. Brunch is served Saturdays and Sundays featuring new classics from Chef Leah DuBois such as "Toast To Life and Bacon" and the "Lobster MacMuffin". 'Spicy Pimento Cheese Fries' and 'Dixie Chicken" start the day right washed down with a Bucket of High Life ponies or the $5 Milkshake.

MOOO.... [15 Beacon Street, Boston, 617-670-2515, mooorestaurant.com] In the shadow of Beacon Hill's lofty State House and within the grandeur of the XV Beacon Hotel is MOOO...., a steakhouse extraordin-aire. Chef David Hutton offers a modern approach of fine selected meat and seafood dishes. Breakfast and lunch weekdays, dinner daily, Sunday brunch, bar and lounge. An impressive Wine Cellar and discreet Parlor Suites are the solution to successful business entertaining and private dining. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

RIVER DANCING

Sheets to the Wind

The sunset was glorious, the crowd was convivial, and no one fell into the Charles at Dancing on the Docks, the Esplanade Association's not-to-be-missed summer soiree.

Front and center for the barbecue and dance party, held on the docks at Community Boating, Inc., were such nonstop party people as fashion icon Erin Gilligan and her handsome husband, Hoyle Kim, the stunning Melinda Sarkis, the dangerous trio of the babe-a-licious Ashley Wisneski and Kelly Boullet with blond Adonis Mark Schwindenhammer, dapper mush William Grote, mover and shaker Peter Gori, the newly engaged Joannas—Humphrey and Prager— brunette bombshell Charlotte Lewis, tall drink of water Dietrich Falkenthal, and various others, including one person who cautioned against looking up "plumpkin pie" on Urban Dictionary.

After filling their bellies, guests filled the dance floor, and an amazing time was had by all, with the possible exception of the two women whose exchange went like this:

"My daughter's in Vogue this month."

"Well, my dog is on Facebook."

Seeing Stars

Plymouth Rock is still the unprepossessing little boulder you remember from grade-school field trips, but the Mayflower II, situated not far away on the waterfront of "America's hometown," inspires awe. Imagine that a ship so tiny brought 102 people on a voyage that changed the world.

That might sound grandiose, but to put it in perspective: One of the guests at Plimoth Plantation's Celestial Celebration gala, held in a tent overlooking the harbor, had a 125-foot ketch out of Newport that she offered up for auction: a day-sail for six people, with a six-person crew.

Lending a hand in keeping the important replica afloat, and having a grand old time doing it, were such notables as board chair Steve Brodeur, National Book Award–winner Nathaniel Philbrick, best-selling author Marianne Leone Cooper and her Oscar-winning husband, Chris, the convincingly lifelike Sen. Scott Brown and his gorgeous wife, Gail Huff, Duxbury chatelaine Judi Vose and the ever-affable Terry, the flawless Bea Roy, grande dame Marty Mugar, divorce-lawyer-turned-florist Joanne Nikitas and her fun-lovin' criminals, and so on and so forth.

A fantastic dinner by culinary superstar Joanne Chang was punctuated by riveting speeches, a live auction and a "fund a need" that prompted the following remark:

"It takes 25 gallons of enamel to paint the ship."

"Funny. It takes 25 gallons of enamel to paint my face."

What Do You Do for an Encore?

So you're a party planner who's done state dinners for Obama, Chelsea Clinton's wedding and every celebration anyone remembers over the past 15 years in Boston, Nantucket and Palm Beach. You're turning 50, and your poor loved ones have to throw you a bash that'll wow you. They succeeded admirably, at least as far as I can remember, because Bryan Rafanelli's blow-out demi-centennial, hosted in P'town by his handsome husband, Mark Walsh, had everyone oohing, aahing and otherwise moaning with pleasure.

A day of activities, hosted partially by fairy godfather Danny Mullin at his West End manse, barely gave anyone time to change into their finery for cocktails beneath the Monument and a dinner (accompanied by eye-popping entertainment that included videotaped greetings from the likes of the secretary of state) at Town Hall.

Present and accounted for: the magnificent Roberta Weiner and her real estate magnate husband, Steve, silver fox Pamela Humphrey and her hubby, John (who sailed in on their 75-foot yacht Wild Thing), yummy mummy Randi Cutler and her adoring other half, Joel, Colombian lothario Ricardo Rodriguez and his dead sexy husband, Michael Kelley, hairstylist to the rich and famous Sal Malafronte and his adorable other half, Darin Contini, and countless sparkly others.

The following day (despite blinding hangovers and blistering heat), everyone congregated at the East End home of Bobby Kelley for some hair of the dog and a delicious brunch. And if that doesn't qualify as the sine qua non and n'est plus ultra of birthday parties, I shouldn't be writing this column. ×××

The IMPROPER

Jelly Bellies

Many years ago, on a school trip to London, my eighth-grade English teacher took us to gawp at the luxury trinkets at Harrod's. I recall our amazement at the giant caviar tins, the diamond tiaras, the sun-glassed sheiks. And also the Jelly Bellies. Those were the Reagan years, and novelty jelly beans had a patina of glamour, even of world-throttling power. To a yapping scrum of 13-year-old boys, a buttered popcorn–flavored jelly bean, especially one endorsed by a man capable of blowing up the Earth, seemed genius.

Adam DeTour

So my friends and I brought a sack of them on the class outing to see a West End matinee of Les Misérables. The first nauseous gurglings set in when we took our seats in the altitude sickness row, but it was when Jean Valjean stole the bishop's silver that I felt a gushing roil of sugar. An aspiring sociopath named Brian McDonough started the trouble. Sullen and bored, he took deliberate aim and flicked a Jelly Belly in a smooth arc over the orchestra pit. For the next two hours, then, unseen in the anonymous dim, we threw jelly beans at the people toiling in the light below. Licorice, coconut, peanut butter. All the crappy flavors took flight as, masked in shadow, we unleashed our spleen on Javert, Thénardier and blameless little Cosette.

This, I suggest, is the act of the online critic. The Yelper, the troll, the nameless grouse. Jittery with stomach acid and resentment, he sits in the rear, flinging excremental bits of goo from the safety of the nosebleed seats.

On a positive note, here are our picks for the fall arts season.

HORSEPLAY

THERE'S MORE TO BOSTON'S HORSE HISTORY than Revere's midnight ride. Founded in 1882, Hamilton's Myopia Hunt Club is the first organization of its kind in America. And while many see the sport as some form of secret society, it's more inclusive than you'd think. "Show jumping is one of the fastest growing sports in the world," says Tony Corey, coproducer and spokesman for the third annual Boston Equestrian Classic at Myopia. Held on Sept. 6 and drawing thousands of fans, the carnival-esque lineup includes not only jumping but everything from skydiving and jousting to the more placid pony ride. "I think it's more accessible than it used to be." Watch out Boston, the equestrians are coming.

Good Eats

Twice as Nice

Three tastes, double the fun

The Double Awesome is a marvelous mashup of three comfort food favorites: the scallion pancake, the breakfast sandwich and the quesadilla. Mei Mei Street Kitchen's most popular item was born when the food truck's sibling owners realized that the pancakes of their childhood would make delicious vehicles for dishes beyond Chinese fare. The result is an ultra-flaky flatbread spread with house pesto—often made with local basil, mustard greens or garlic scapes. Next comes melted Vermont cheddar and two poached-then-fried eggs. Folding the creation in half multiplies the flavor, and may have you ordering seconds. ELIZABETH BOMZE

ISLAND RHYTHM
A taste of Jamaica

Drink of the Moment

STEADY AS SHE GOES

NAME: Rock Steady

CONTENTS: Smith & Cross rum ("Navy Strength" at 114 proof), St. Elizabeth Allspice Dram, Pierre Ferand Dry Orange Curaçao, angostura and aromatic bitters, Barritts Ginger Beer, mint garnish.

PRICE: $10.

INVENTOR: The inimitable Brother Cleve.

INSPIRATION: The Dark 'n' Stormy. Also, rocksteady, a Jamaican music genre related to reggae and ska that peaked in popularity during the 1960s.

TASTE: Bitters define the first sip, framing the drink as a serious cocktail, not a sweet, rummy wash. A hard stroke of alcohol and spice follows next, courtesy of the Navy-strength booze. Ginger beer pops and fizzes at the tail.

TASTE, EXPRESSED MORE LYRICALLY: "It's got a lilting rhythm," says Cleve. "It swings and sways, like a reggae organ."

SECRET WEAPON: The St. Elizabeth Allspice Dram, which reinforces the bitters with pepper and clove.

THE REST OF THE COCKTAIL LIST: "Since this is the site of the first printing press, I wanted something related to printing," says Cleve, who signed on to overhaul the drinks program. The result includes 19th-century tipples like the Correspondent, featuring cognac, green chartreuse and liqueur de rose (concocted from essence of rose, Crème de Violette and Crème Yvette).

HISTORICITY: Cleve found inspiration in his personal library of 300–400 cocktail books, including such rare titles as 1935's So Red the Nose, which reveals that Mr. Ernest Hemingway's favorite drink is absinthe mixed with Champagne.

FUTURE TITLES: Look for Cleve's upcoming take on an alcoholic snowcone. ANDREW RIMAS

PIG, OUT

And winning with wine

WHEN DOES "CLOSED" become "finished"? In late July, the Bearded Pig opened in Somerville to immediate enthusiasm—only to shut its doors a few weeks later. A note on its website explained it was "temporarily closed while we move the smokehouse." Soon after, the phone was disconnected, and eventually the Pig tweeted notice of a permanent and final conclusion. A sad short story, as it was barely open long enough to grow a five o'clock shadow.

FOOD TRUCKS ARE BIG IN THE CITY, and now the 'burbs are having their turn. Blue Ribbon Barbecue has been sending vehicles into the wilds of suburban office parks, and recently Captain Marden's, supplier of fish to many a Boston restaurant, has launched the Cod Squad to feed the seafood-loving populace of Wellesley. What's next: Dover Soul?

CONGRATULATIONS TO GRILL 23 wine director Brahm Callahan, who triumphed in the inaugural Antinori Sommelier Challenge held at New York City's Bar Boulud. Drawing from the riches of the Grill 23 cellar, he out-paired sommelier Nelson Daquip of Seattle's Canlis to bring glory home to Boston, although he spent his entire cash prize back in Manhattan. (He also won a trip to Austria.)

As for his winning strategy, "When you're pairing wine with food, you have to pay attention to the accompaniments," says Callahan. Most importantly, "I try not to overthink it."

NO RESERVATIONS

In the 31 years since the old Federal Reserve Bank of Boston was converted into a hotel, only one part of the building was never renovated. That changes when the Reserve Bar opens in the Langham, Boston hotel lobby this month. "We just didn't want to renovate and change the lighting, and do a little bit—no," says the Langham's managing director, Serge Denis. "We wanted to really bring something dramatically new."

THE RESERVE BAR
250 Franklin St., Boston
(617-451-1900)
boston.langhamhotels.com

The Reserve Bar recalls vintage sophistication, replacing an '80s look with a design that plays to the building's history. "People seem to be nostalgic," says Denis, "always trying to bring a little bit of the past back. But it's not always done very well." With its imported Italian marble floor and twinkling lounge dotted with leather chairs and sofas, the Reserve Bar has, in Denis' words, "a kind of timeless elegance."

Executive chef Mark Sapienza's menus begin with a breakfast of house-made pastries, fresh fruit, yogurt parfaits and smoothies. An all-day menu includes New American options like tomato soup spiked with allspice and garnished with crème fraîche, and a Vidalia onion and Vermont goat cheese tart. The service, says Sapienza, will be modern, with staff plating modular trays (picture Americanized bento boxes) with customers' choices.

Tea is another feature. In addition to the traditional Tiffin tea that the Langham, London introduced in 1865, there's a "Boston Tea Party" with New England bites and pastries including Boston cream pies, French macarons and cranberry-ginger scones, served with a choice of hot or iced tea. A later service, an extension of Tiffin, features lobster Marie Rose, chocolate-dipped strawberries and, instead of caffeine, Champagne. "It's quirky," says Sapienza. "There are no boundaries."

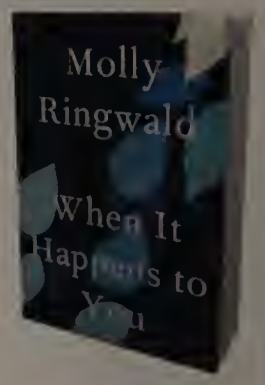
Q&A

PRETTY IN PRINT

Brat Pack star Molly Ringwald reads from When It Happens to You, her second book, on Sept. 11 at Brookline Booksmith.

Are there any similarities between acting and writing?



There's something about acting that can feel absolutely maddening, which is you need other people to do it. You need a script, you need a director, you need an audience, you need a camera. So I've always gone a little crazy between projects because I have this creative thing in me that has to get out, and writing has always filled that for me. It's gone a long way to keep me sane.

What drove you to write this novel?

I wanted to write something that was universal. Betrayal is just one of those things that everybody's been through. It's just our world, because we're human beings, and we're flawed. We hurt the people we love the most. I think something about the age that I'm at, and the parents at the kids' schools—I made really good friends with two women. During the course of so many years, both of their marriages dissolved because of betrayal. I started with the archetypical marital betrayal, because that's what everybody thinks about. But I wanted to make sure that every single story had a kind of betrayal in it to get across the idea that we're all betraying and we're all betrayed, and we're all trying to do our best to muddle through.

If your book were made into a film, who would direct it and play the title roles?

Me, me, me! I want to write and direct it. I don't want to play the title role, however. I think if I were to play any role, I'd like to play Marina. She's the only role I wrote as a redhead. But it's not just that. I always saw [protagonist] Greta as a little bit smaller than me and quieter in a way. Sarah Polley, she's somebody I've seen a lot, not so much as I was writing it, but just later on. I also like Maggie Gyllenhaal. Demetri Martin is really interested in playing the role of Peter.

Along with supporting garage-band albums and the literary aspirations of your old college roommate, those trendy online funding platforms are putting some really good food on local dinner tables. Thanks to cash raised through Indiegogo, Michael Dulock (former owner of Concord Prime and Fish) just opened M.F. Dulock. His whole-animal butcher shop, located next to the Somerville Armory, offers pasture-raised cuts of beef, lamb, goat and other meats sourced from local farmers, as well as house-made sausages, offal and even heads. Dulock's now completed its journey from crowd-sourcing to crowd-pleasing.

TO THE SHOE SHOPPERS AT DSW at Downtown Crossing: Thanks for completely ignoring me as I loudly asked for security, after someone had done something very inappropriate as I rode the escalator to the second floor. I only hope something like this never happens to your sister, girlfriend or wife! Thanks to a total lack of involvement, this person is now back on the streets of Boston and free to do this (or worse) to some one else. I'm not sorry that I've moved from Boston to NYC, where people actually step up to help those in need. Disappointed in Boston

To the "Guy who's happy he isn't your grandchild": As someone who lived through the '80s, I remember how my family immigrated to the U.S. and prospered thanks to a solid economy and the freedom to succeed, so long as you were willing to work for it. Reagan believed in the country, made good decisions and didn't take a hundred vacations a year. The class warfare issue masks the true problem going on in our country—one that has nothing do with finances and everything to do with accountability and a good work ethic. Keep that in mind the next time you're in Allston on a Saturday night, stepping around the kids passed out on the sidewalk or the bros setting fire to cars. Instead of Occupying Boston and hating on capitalist economics, this generation should've occupied a library to learn something other than regurgitated pedantics. Vexed feminist, Latina and Republican reader

EASY EFFERVESCENCE

No sound gets a party flowing like the pop of a bottle of bubbly. Champagne may be the king, but it's gotten really expensive. The good news is there's a wide world of stylish sparklers. Remember that every wine reflects its underlying grapes, so a bubbly made from pinot noir will taste similar to its flat iteration. Also, there are two ways to introduce CO2: fermenting in the bottle, which imparts a yeastiness, or fermenting in a tank, which tends to enhance fruity flavors. The following are all superb.

✳ JCB "No. 21" Cremant de Bourgogne, Brut NV ($21, Federal Wine & Spirits) Crafted in the traditional method, this outstanding Burgundy is a smooth wine with all the elegance of a Blanc de Blancs Champagne. Created by the dynamic Jean-Charles Boisset, its delicate toastiness and hint of lemon are thoroughly delicious. A testament to balance, it's composed of roughly equal parts chardonnay and pinot noir. Completely dry, it's an understated complement to shellfish or light hors d'oeuvres.

✳ Adriano Adami "Garbél" Prosecco, NV ($13, Bauer Wine & Spirits) Produced from the expressive glera grape, prosecco is one of the hottest rising stars not only in the sparkling category but in the world of wine. This is a dry, apple-and-floral-scented wine made by the third-generation Adami family on the hillsides of the Veneto in northeastern Italy. Crisp, clean and mellow with delicious fruitiness, this prosecco is a refreshing accompaniment for crudités, cured meats and cheeses.

✳ Michele Chiarlo Moscato d'Asti "Nivole" 2011 ($14, half bottle, Winestone) Unashamedly sweet, this is one of the most versatile wines you'll ever taste. Scented with notes of jasmine and lavender, moscato has a distinctively peach-and-melon flavor. Fine and delicate, it's only partially sparkling and extremely low in alcohol (5 percent), so it makes a fantastic brunch bubbly. Like cantaloupe with prosciutto, this wine loves salty flavors. Or enjoy as either a liquid dessert or an accompaniment to fruit tarts.

Sunny Complexion

BLISS SPA 100 Stuart St., Boston (617-261-8747) blissworld.com/spa

Autumn doesn't make you impervious to the sun. Emily Payne, lead aesthetician at Bliss Spa, sums it up: "Rainy, sunny, snowy, in a car or through the window of your office, the sun's rays are out there and can penetrate your skin." Payne recommends two exfoliating treatments for restoring a compromised complexion.

CHEMICAL PEEL: Acid-based exfoliants target signs of aging as well as freckles, sunspots and scars. Ingredients such as glycolic, salicylic and lactic acids cause a blister effect—but in a beneficial way. "After one treatment you'll see instant results, but a series of six every 10 days is recommended to get the brightest bright," says Payne. For sun-damaged skin, use vitamin C or kojic acid to smooth unwanted discoloration. Payne recommends the Bright Stuff facial ($180 at Bliss), a 60-minute peel that comes with a collagen mask.

MICRODERMABRASION: A physical exfoliation, "Microdermabrasion is performed by gliding a pen-shaped wand on your skin," says Payne. "It can feel a little scratchy. Each pass breaks down another dead layer." People with a darker complexion are safer sticking to this method for treating discoloration—unlike with chemical peels, there's no chance of uneven skin tone caused by too much acid. Payne suggests Crystal Clearing ($235), which focuses on the face and neck and includes a revitalizing oxygen spray.

BOSTON'S FINEST

A story set during the police strike of 1919

THE DISTURBING AND colorful events of the year 1919 set the foundation for Redfearn's Boston-based historical novel. World War I is over, leaving veterans adrift. The city's Irish remain oppressed, and the police force is run ragged, earning pitiful wages for their heroic efforts.

Redfearn's multitude of characters includes politicians like Calvin Coolidge, the right-wing governor of Massachusetts who later became president. There are chilly Brahmin business leaders who resist the force's attempts to unionize. In their resentment they dismiss the "coppers" as Bolsheviks. One of the cops, Willie Dwyer, fled Ireland following a revenge murder before becoming involved in a police strike that ravages Boston and polarizes its disparate groups. After numerous daring adventures, Dwyer works a deal involving the future President of Ireland in the hopes of returning home and avoiding imprisonment.

The Rising at Roxbury Crossing
by James Redfearn

Redfearn is an investigator for a Boston law firm and a former Massachusetts State Trooper.

The book is dense with political and historical energy, including period news stories and photographs of state guards rounding up hoodlums on Boston Common. The characters are salty, often slick and bitter. While there's gritty, sex-related blackmail and a bit of romance, Redfearn's descriptions of 1919 Boston are always lyrical. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 337: She shifted her hips and drove the blade into Rossini's scrotum. He screamed, jerked up, the gun discharging a bullet into the cabin's ceiling, and folded over with the letter opener impaled into his groin. Nolan jumped him and drove the butt of the shotgun into his head, knocking him to the floor, and then stomped the hand that held the gun. "Put the handcuffs on him, Willie," Nolan said as he collapsed on the stairs. After a few moments, he pointed to Catherine. "That's a neat little trick you got there. Who taught you that?"

"Joan of Arc." She held up the handle of the letter opener. "A girl's protector."

THE COMPLEX TALE OF WHISTLING

IN SOUTHEAST ASIA, WHISTLING IS THOUGHT TO ATTRACT SNAKES.

In Serbia*, it's thought to attract mice.

IN AMERICAN CONSTRUCTION SITES, IT'S THOUGHT TO ATTRACT FEMALES.

All told, the human whistle is not a simple sound. In fact, it's probably the second most controversial noise the human body can make. BECAUSE FOR SPORTS FANS IN THE UNITED STATES, WHISTLING MEANS, "HOORAY!" FOR SPORTS FANS IN EUROPE IT MEANS, "LET'S FIREBOMB THE REFEREE'S CAR."

IN THE CANARY ISLANDS, WHISTLING MAKES UP AN ENTIRE LANGUAGE CALLED SILBO GOMERO. WHILE IN OTHER PARTS OF THE WORLD, IT'S SIMPLY KNOWN AS THE SOUND ANNOYING PEOPLE MAKE WHEN THEY'RE HAPPY.

Skilled whistlers have even turned their talent into an art form. Dubbed PUCCALO – a combination of the words "pucker" and "piccolo" – it's a highly refined whistling technique. Some say the sound is so sweet it makes birds cry. Others say birds can't cry. They don't have tear ducts. So go to Louisburg, North Carolina — the world's whistling capital — or ask any professional Puccalist working today. and they'll surely tell you: Whistling is a lot more complex than it sounds.

IT'S A STEEL

From art to food, Pittsburgh proves its mettle.

RIVERS RUN THROUGH IT Pittsburgh's seeing a renaissance.

A TRIP TO THE RUST BELT may not be first on your wish list for weekend getaways, but there are plenty of reasons to pay a visit. Over the years, Pittsburgh, the city formed by Carnegie Steel, has seen massive growth in education, health care, technology and financial services that have boosted the economy since the industry collapsed in the 1980s. The place has more bridges than Venice (think biking, running and river walks), a surfeit of art (more than 250 museums, galleries and theaters) and amazing food (beyond French-fry stuffed sandwiches). Indeed, the "City of Steel" sports a tantalizing shine.

Base yourself at the Fairmont Pittsburgh, located in the hubbub of downtown known as the "golden triangle." The hotel's plush rooms sport flat-screen TVs, media panels for all your gadgets and floor-to-ceiling windows overlooking either Downtown or the Allegheny River. There's also a top-notch restaurant, Habitat, which is focused, naturally, on local produce. And, like its Boston counterpart, the hotel even has a dog in the lobby who can join you on a run (her name is Edie).

✓ Traveler's Checks

JetBlue offers daily, direct flights to Pittsburgh.

The Duquesne Incline opens at 5:30 am, so you can catch the sunrise from on high.

Pittsburgh is a city with highly unusual topography, possessing three rivers and an in-city mountain. To get your bearings, take a morning ride up the Duquesne Incline in a funicular dating back to 1877. The tram follows the tracks of what used to be a coal hoist up Mount Washington and leads to an observation deck 400 feet above the Allegheny, Monongahela and Ohio rivers. Notice the butter-yellow bridges and the riverfront buildings along Fort Pitt Boulevard, built after the Great Fire of 1845. A triangle of skyscrapers includes the "Glass Palace," a spired complex of glass towers designed by architect Philip Johnson.

Next, check out Pittsburgh's art scene, arguably one of the finest in the country thanks, in part, to steel magnate and philanthropist Andrew Carnegie, whose largess spawned the Carnegie Museum of Natural History, Carnegie Science Center and the Andy Warhol Museum, an impressive shrine to the Pittsburgh native's life and art. The Carnegie Museum of Art, considered the first museum of modern art in the country, is now exhibiting a show of contemporary crafts, but will debut Inventing the Modern World: Decorative Arts at the World's Fairs, 1851–1939 on Oct. 13.

Ketchup aficionados won't want to miss the Senator John Heinz History Center, a standout museum that devotes a whole section to the condiment. Other options for kids and adults include an exhibit on robots, Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood (set in Pittsburgh) and the city's glassmaking traditions. For more offbeat art, head to the Mattress Factory. Sept. 7 marks the opening of Feminism and... which showcases women artists' take on the subject.

As a food town, Pittsburgh shows off its immigrant history (drawing from Italian, Polish and German influence, to name a few), and from food trucks to fancy restaurants, you won't go hungry. For sheer fun, head to the Strip District, once the center of Pittsburgh's 19th-century iron industry and now home to myriad wholesale and retail produce stalls, ethnic markets, restaurants and coffee shops. The famous Primanti Bros. serves their Italian bread sandwich stuffed with tomatoes, coleslaw, your deli meat of choice and, yes, French fries. The Church Brew Works offers divine suds and grub in a historic church, with the steel and copper beer tanks set on the altar. Some of the city's best pierogi come from Pierogies Plus. They make their dumplings from scratch and fill them with everything from spuds to apricots.

For dinner, don't miss Meat & Potatoes in the Theater District. It's a carnivore's paradise—mac 'n' cheese with chorizo and a "Salty Pig" flatbread with sopressata, pancetta and coppa secca—but the menu also offers soft shell crab tacos and Korean BBQ salmon. Later, savor a nightcap and live entertainment at Backstage Bar, which serves creative cocktails, wines by the glass and casual nibbles. More daring, perhaps, is Papa J's Centro, a supposedly haunted ex-brothel, where you can nurse a "Naughty School Girl" (raspberry and blueberry vodkas, pomegranate liqueur, cranberry juice and ginger ale) in one of the many cozy little rooms.

Given all this, it's obvious that the city of steel shows spark. ✖✖✖

PRIZE RIBBONS Tangles of sliced calamari make a for a must-order dish.

THERE'S A DISH THAT exemplifies West Bridge's understated creativity, chef Matthew Gaudet's exceptional command of ingredients and his willingness to use them in novel ways. But the much-lauded "egg in a jar" ($12) isn't it. Written up in rhapsodic terms since the restaurant opened in May, this elevated breakfast in a glass might as well be a centerpiece at every table. Although indisputably delicious, a fancified egg doesn't compare to the calamari ($13), presented as a tangle of soft noodles mixed with yellow and red tomatoes, cockles and whelks. Tasting like the apotheosis of pasta and seafood, the squid does double duty as carb and protein. Whereas the egg in a jar merges extravagant ingredients (duck egg, chicken crackling and hen of the woods mushrooms) with buttery potatoes, the comforting results could be achieved with bacon, eggs and whipped spuds. The calamari, by contrast, eludes description in its subtlety. It is and it isn't linguini and shellfish at the same time.

The West Bridge menu is divided into three parts—small, large and to share. There's a steep increase in price between these different sections, and while a couple of smalls ($7-$14) could satisfy one person, and a "to share" plate ($42-$45) can easily feed two, the entrees ($23-$29) yielded the least value. The duck breast ($26) arrived in three small pieces over black rice with a sprinkling of hazelnuts and a crowning of frisée. The rice was nutty and rich with the juice of the medium-rare duck. But the dish's shortcoming was that there wasn't enough of it.

B.N.'s Picks

Calamari

Sweetbreads

Roast lamb

S'mores mousse

Besides the egg in the jar and calamari, another small-plate standout was the sweetbreads ($15). Three creamy, sweet morsels came glazed with an apricot-lobster butter and dotted with cubes of blue cheese, giving the offal a pleasant tang. Of the three shareable dishes, make sure to order the lamb shoulder ($45), a huge roast of medium-rare lamb sliced into three-inch chops. Currant-red and tender, the lamb hardly needed the accompanying goat cheese or eggplant-fig purée as a sauce. It was a dish designed to conjure images of conviviality and full bellies over Sunday-night suppers.

Less successful were lunchtime offerings like the steak salad ($16), which brought an overcooked filet notable for its stringiness, and a lackluster peach pie ($6) with a dry crust. While the s'mores mousse ($7) incorporated contrasting ingredients to wonderful effect—miso-syrup providing an umami dimension to the base layers of chocolate panna cotta and house-made marshmallow—the chocolate-chip-cookie bread pudding ($7) was inedible. Three deep-fried cubes of compressed chocolate chip cookies (which seemed to be missing the chocolate) were accompanied by a mouth-puckeringly tart strawberry sauce.

But the infrequent misses were easy to overlook when perched at the bar with a glass of La Cartuja Priorat ($10) or a seasonal craft cocktail ($11) mixed by bar manager Josh Taylor, formerly of Eastern Standard. The West Bridge team clearly designed the 3,600-square-foot Kendall Square space for mass appeal: With floor-to-ceiling windows overlooking Hampshire Street, the long slate bar invites both after-work techies and pre-theater-goers interested in a quick bite, while the separate dining area and private room draw date-nighters and larger groups. Only a few months old, the restaurant already operates with the confidence of a neighborhood mainstay, thanks to general manager/co-owner Alexis Gelburd-Kimler, formerly of Aquitaine and Craigie on Main. The only quibble with service is that the ambitiousness of Gaudet's food can get lost when waiters drop off dishes and walk away without explaining them. Part of the payoff of dining at West Bridge is discovering how ingredients are used in innovative ways. However casual or approachable the restaurant seems, it's the moment of upended expectations that makes dining here worthwhile. ✖✖✖

ASK CHERYL

Q: I HAD ACNE AS A TEENAGER AND NOW HAVE BAD ACNE SCARS ON MY FACE; CAN ANYTHING BE DONE?

A: I'm sorry to hear that. Millions of people suffer from acne scars. I have good news for you. Within the past few years several types of new technology have been introduced that significantly reduce, and some cases totally eliminate, scars from acne, as well as other types of scars.

For example, stretch marks and surgical scars can be treated very successfully!

This is how it works: pulses of fractional laser light or radio frequency waves break down scar tissue, triggering new, healthy tissue to form in its place. It is a fast and simple procedure with no downtime and minimal discomfort.

You don't have to live with the embarrassment of your scars any longer. Fractional laser treatments can be even be used on scars that you have had for many years with good success.

SINGLE LADIES

In a story about four friends, jealousy takes the cake.

Bachelorette ★★★½
Starring Kirsten Dunst, Isla Fisher, Lizzy Caplan, Rebel Wilson, James Marsden and Adam Scott. Written and directed by Leslye Headland. At Kendall Square and available via Video On Demand.

I DON'T PAY MUCH ATTENTION to box office numbers, but here's an interesting tidbit you may not have heard. Earlier this summer Wes Anderson's wonderful Moonrise Kindgom smashed all sorts of attendance records in its opening weekend, grossing half a million dollars in a paltry four theaters. Less publicized was the fact that, a few weeks ago, Leslye Headland's Bachelorette matched that number, without even hitting the big screen.

Following in the footsteps of boutique distributors like Magnolia and IFC, the Weinstein Company has begun releasing select movies direct to local cable companies several weeks in advance of the films' debuts. It's a touchy subject, as I can attest. Earlier this summer I kicked a hornet's nest and upset certain PR people by giving a positive review to Sarah Polley's Take This Waltz after purchasing it On Demand.

The short version is that theater chains don't want you knowing that you can now get their movies cheaper and earlier without even having to leave the house. And while I'm a die-hard aficionado of the big-screen, communal, movie-going experience—considering myself blessed to live in a town where we have amazing independent venues like the Brattle, Somerville and Coolidge Corner Theatre—the fact remains that our corporate multiplexes (Common, Fenway and Kendall Square) are abject embarrassments. Depending on where you see these films, staying home might not be such a bad idea.

Bachelorette is already a blockbuster by On Demand standards, and it just might be the game-changer. This raw, screamingly funny low-budget comedy divided audiences at the Sundance Film Festival. It's chock-full of drug use, casual sex and some astonishingly inventive flights of profanity. I laughed myself sick, but I don't imagine anybody involved ever pretended this was something suitable for a mainstream release.

Adapted and directed by Leslye Headland from her stage play, Bachelorette is mostly about what happens when old friends resent each other's good fortune. High-school besties Regan (Kirsten Dunst), Katie (Isla Fisher), Gena (Lizzy Caplan) and Becky (Rebel Wilson) reunite when the latter is getting married to a millionaire. The morbidly obese, socially awkward Becky is the last of this quartet one would ever expect to live happily ever after, and don't think that's lost on the other three. Hence all the cocaine.

Dunst's Regan is the prissy rich girl who always did everything right. She's got an impeccable wardrobe, clipped diction and a (mysteriously absent) doctor boyfriend. She devotes her time to philanthropic endeavors with cancer kids, but she just might be the most condescending character ever captured on-screen.

Caplan's Gena is a besotted blur. She's introduced waking up from a one-night stand and realizes, only after seeing the guy's Jack Johnson concert T-shirt, that she just slept with a loser. Fisher's character is sadder still, puffing out her boobs and coasting on Kewpie-doll sex appeal to cover up that she doesn't understand what's going on most of the time.

Headland's writing is ruthless, as these women constantly compete with and undercut one another, despite ostensibly being "best friends." It's catty, potty-mouthed and seems to strike a nerve with certain audiences. A slightly contrived prank-gone-wrong sends our bachelorettes out on a mission the evening before the wedding—an all-night crawl drenched with shock, strip-clubs and so much blow that at one point Katie spontaneously starts squirting blood from her nose.

Bachelorette is hysterically funny and awfully sad, somehow incorporating bulimia, abortion and overdoses into the breathlessly paced, farcical structure. It isn't Bridesmaids, it's Hurlyburly for women pushing 30.

In her first stint behind the camera, Headland knows exactly when to drop the frenzy and allow an expression or two to sink in on her actresses' faces. There's some real depth going on beyond the shock value. This movie plays for keeps.

So how to watch it? Ay, there's the rub. The first time I saw Bachelorette was at its Sundance premiere in a 1,500-seat theater where audiences gasped, roared and walked out in droves. (Also Kirsten Dunst was there, which was awesome.) The second time was by myself in an empty apartment, and while I enjoyed the movie just as much, the viewing experience left something to be desired.

There's no easy answer to this Video On Demand development, but it's not going away. Not after these numbers. And in this town, where you've got once-respected theaters routinely charging audiences $11 to watch DVDs projected from a Sony PlayStation3, sometimes the choice to stay home isn't much of a choice at all. ✖✖✖

CRAZY RIDE

Boys Like Girls play House of Blues on Sept. 22.

THOUGH RARELY recognized around their hometown, Boys Like Girls inspire craziness around the world. The Boston pop-rockers have sold millions of records and thrilled crowds as far away as Singapore, where the band played a show in July before 15,000 fans.

"Kids were going nuts for us over there, which was awesome," says drummer John Keefe, a Mansfield native. "They all had glowsticks and signs and were screaming. We were like, 'Holy s!' It's surreal. Then you go sit in a tent with a little white light. It's like you're going a million miles an hour and then it's off. It almost feels like it didn't really happen."

Their current reality was just a faraway dream in 2005, when Keefe, singer/guitarist Martin Johnson and original bassist Bryan Donahue founded the band in an attic apartment in Taunton.

"It was an absolute shole, but it was fun," recalls Keefe, who slept on a mattress in the kitchen and worked a landscaping job by day. He also supplemented the fledgling band's infamous diet of ramen noodles with produce from his family's farm. "It wasn't like we were starving, but we were making the best of what we had," he says. "It'd be tough now to go back."

> "Playing in front of an audience is the only time I feel that I have some type of real purpose in life."

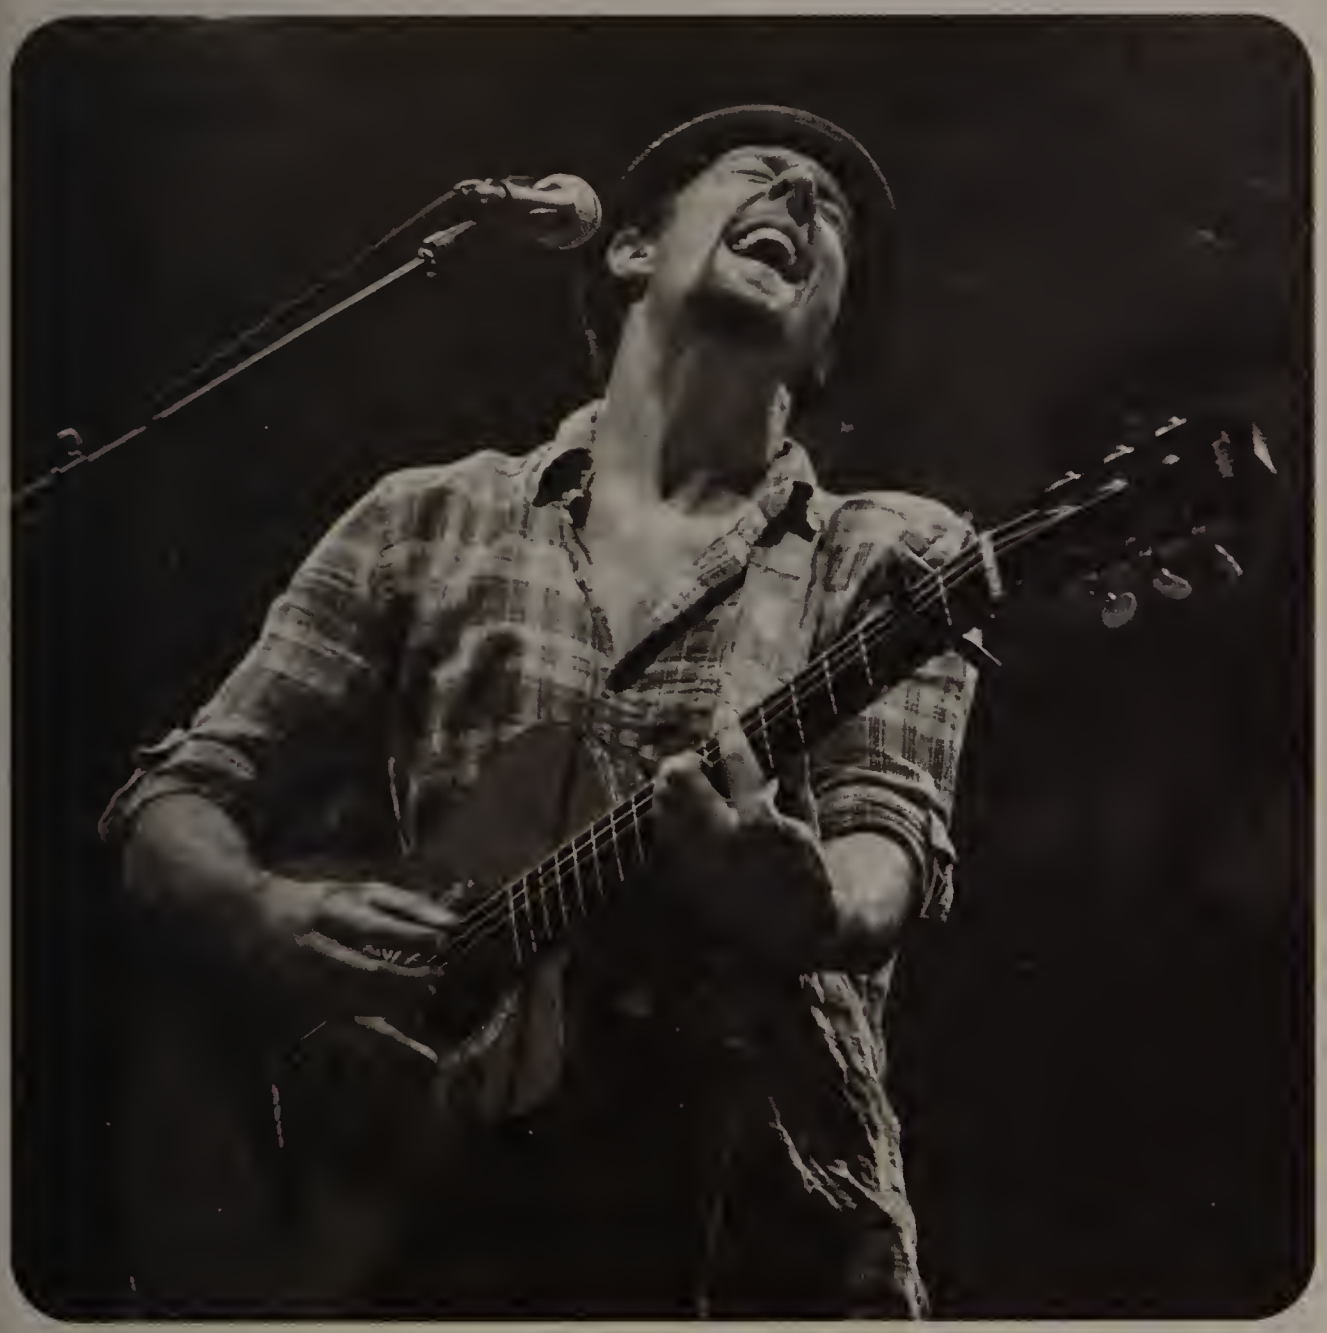
Indeed, life has changed for Boys Like Girls in the six years between the group's eponymous debut and their just-released third album, Crazy World. But Keefe contends that success didn't come quickly.

"It always gets a lot harder before it gets easier," he says. "We did 13 U.S. tours in a van over the course of about two years straight until we got into our first bus. We all paid dues. It's always funny when there's some punk kid who doesn't like your music, and he'll yell at you, like, 'You guys didn't put in your time.' And you say, 'You have no idea.'"

For Keefe, 29, that meant playing thousands of gigs since his unusual first break at age 15 when he joined Shania Twain onstage at Great Woods (now the Comcast Center). "I was very hooked," the drummer says. "Playing in front of an audience, I'd say, is the only time I feel that I have some type of real purpose in life." Countless shows later—from his family barn to small club and community shows around Massachusetts and Rhode Island—Keefe linked with Johnson, who graduated early from Andover High School to focus on their music career.

Boys Like Girls began in the pop-punk vein but have grown into more of a mainstream pop sound. Last year, faced with radio's growing shift away from guitar-based rock, they scrapped tracks for their next album and took a hiatus. "You spend that much time with the same guys doing every goddamn thing together," Keefe says. "We needed a break." Johnson, who had copenned Taylor Swift's "If This Was a Movie," went to Nashville to write and inevitably came up with the songs that became Crazy World.

Johnson, Keefe and guitarist Paul DiGiovanni replaced Donahue with bassist Morgan Dorr for the new album, streamlining emotive songs that aim for fans' heartstrings—and that should increase the band's hometown profile. Guitars give way to light orchestration, which in turn plays up the melodies and Johnson's falsetto-capped vocals. "The First Time" spills nostalgic lines with an effusive country-pop feel, while Johnson sings "I'll make you shiver, I'll keep you warm" in "Be My Everything," evoking visions of young fans swaying their hands.



But the screams and sing-alongs sometimes overshadow musicianship and craft in concert, especially when Johnson fuels the fervor with inside stories between songs. Keefe says he occasionally wishes the focus was more on music, but understands that it's a show.

"It's about the whole environment and just letting people get away from their everyday grind," says Keefe, whose group plays House of Blues later this month. "If they want to listen to your music, they can go turn on your CD. They come out to see you, and that interaction with your fans is a very big part of it." ×××

REDEMPTION ROAD

Can the Patriot Way still lead to a championship?

WE'RE ALL STILL bitter. The Patriots had another great season, another Super Bowl appearance and another heartbreaking loss to the same Manning, sealed with a similar play. This time around it was Mario Manningham making the miraculous catch, but the sting hurts like before. The only way to relieve our frustration is to see the Patriots return to the championship podium.

I have to admit, the 2012 roster has me excited. The Red Sox haven't exactly been competing for our attention, which makes the anticipation for opening kickoff that much greater. When I look at the weapons the Patriots now have, particularly on offense, my mind rushes back, not to the Dynasty Days of the early 2000s, but to the beginning of the Randy Moss era. That 2007 team was loaded, and we knew they were going to light the league up before the preseason even started.

Well, I got that feeling again.

Over the past few years, the Patriots have had trouble throwing the deep ball. The news from Foxboro is that Brandon Lloyd is going to fix that. I realize that Lloyd has had a rocky existence in the NFL—the Pats are his sixth team in 11 seasons—however, he has established chemistry with Patriots offensive coordinator Josh McDaniels. The duo bonded in Denver after a spirited beginning. Now, it appears Lloyd has bought into McDaniels' plans and the Patriot Way.

So what does that mean for the offense, with Tom Brady newly equipped with a threat for 30-, 40- and 50-yard passes? It could result in another banner year for the two star tight ends, Rob Gronkowski and Aaron Hernandez.

Let's be real about Gronkowski. The guy likes to have a good time, and it's possible that the ladies love Gronk more than he loves himself. He's enjoyed his life outside of football as much as anybody since Joe Namath. Contrary to some sportscasters, I don't mind if a guy likes to party. Hell, I like to partake myself. If Gronk can still produce on Sunday afternoons, he can do whatever he wants with his Friday nights. Last season, he proved that he was essentially uncoverable, as he caught 90 passes and set an NFL record for touchdowns by a tight end in a season (17). Can he match what he did a year ago? Considering the new weapons around him, he could actually be better.

This defense may be the best we've seen since the Patriots were winning Super Bowls, not just getting to them.

Perhaps we won't have the same offensive explosion that we saw in 2007—when Brady was setting the record for touchdown tosses (50)—but don't you get the feeling the Patriots could be running up the score a few times in 2012?

But enough about the offense. What really has me excited is the Patriots' new defense. Looking back to the great New York Giants defenses of the 1980s, those fearsome squads designed by a hungry young coordinator named Bill Belichick, you realize that a side stacked with playmakers can wreak havoc on the opposition. With Jerod Mayo leading the charge, Brandon Spikes maturing and first-round picks Chandler Jones and Dont'a Hightower poised to excel from day one, this New England D looks ready to attack the opposition, not just slow them down—which has been the team strategy as of late. There are questions, of course. Can Devin McCourty shake off his sophomore slump? Can safety Patrick Chung become the enforcer the team needs him to be? We'll see. But with a cache of emerging talent and a cornerstone like Vince Wilfork, the greatest nose tackle in the game, this defense may be the best we've seen since the Patriots were winning Super Bowls, not just getting to them.

Everything is in place for another big year, and 14 wins are definitely in the realm of possibility. (To hell with going undefeated. We don't need to revisit that curse.)

It's championship or bust for the 2012 Patriots. Hopefully in 2013 we'll be cherishing Super Bowl memories, not trying to repress them. ×××

FEELING DEFENSIVE

On the allure of domestic weaponry

Read more at improper.com/blogs

WHEN I LIVED IN BEACON HILL, my apartment was repeatedly burglarized. My wallet was stolen from my car. The car's stereo was pried from the dash more than once. And yet I never felt unsafe. I certainly never felt the need to buy a firearm. I had guns growing up in Maine, and I suspect that a gun would be more dangerous to me than it'd be to any potential intruder. As someone who says "Whoops!" a lot, I should probably avoid loaded weapons.

But over the years, a sort of latent Neanderthal, protect-this-cave mentality gradually snuck up on me. That simmering paranoia was recently heightened when thieves cased two of my neighbors' houses, with screens slashed and windows broken. It wasn't enough to make me install a panic room or buy an AK, but those incidents did get me thinking that maybe I should have some kind of bad-guy contingency plan. Ideally I'd set up a system of booby traps of the sort devised by Data in The Goonies or Kevin in Home Alone. But, like a gun, that bucket of paint would probably incapacitate me long before it could thwart a comically bumbling crook.

Given my concerns, installing a security system might seem like a prudent move. But back when I painted houses, I once inadvertently tripped the security system on a posh place in Ipswich. The alarm company called and, via the intercom, demanded that I identify myself. "I'm here to paint the house," I said. The guy on the other end replied, "OK, sorry about that," and turned off the alarm. Apparently security systems rely on criminals to confess their ill intentions when queried by a stern phone operator.

We do have dogs, which some people consider a line of defense. But that approach depends on the dog. My in-laws own a towering prehistoric wolf-creature that somehow masquerades as the family pet, and I'm sure that he'd be a credible deterrent if he were home at night and not out roaming the tundra hunting chupacabras. At our house, one of my dogs is big enough to give an intruder pause. The other, a basset hound mutt, would just give the intruder his paw to shake. I figure it's a push on the dog front.

What I need is a weapon that's just dangerous enough to quell my paranoia, but not so dangerous that I'll worry about Heather getting mad and using it on me. That rules out guns, machetes, crossbows, slingshots and many other items sold in the sporting goods section at Walmart. So I decide to go to a home-defense website and ponder my non-lethal options. And, oh, what options there are.

I hope you realize that the pen your colleague is holding could actually be a "tactical pen," which is just like a regular Bic except for a weighted metal point on one end. Owners of this particular instrument might say the pen is mightier than the sword, but I suspect people holding swords would disagree.

Elsewhere on the "popular products" page, there's a bewildering array of weapons that clip to your keychain—knives, brass knuckles, and my personal favorite, the Monkey Fist. This "inconspicuous self-defense striking tool" is simply a metal ball wrapped inside a knot tied at the end of a cord on your keychain. Why do they call it the Monkey Fist, you ask? Obviously you've never crossed an irritable marmoset.

I say if you're going to bother with brass knuckles, you should ante up for the Zap Blast Knuckles, which include a built-in 950,000-volt stun gun. Under the user reviews, a woman named Erin writes, "It's basically the power of Zeus for your hand." Envisioning the possible uses, I fear that the power of the gods would not rest easy in my hands. Need a little more personal space on the Green Line? Zap! Zeus' will is done.

The stealthiest weapon on the site is a baseball cap that has a pouch of steel birdshot sewn into the back. "You don't need to reach into your pocket or purse to get to a self-defense weapon," reads the description. "Just reach up and grab this hat off your head." Although it seems very ninja to repel an assailant with your cap, this doesn't sound like an entirely practical piece of everyday apparel. Heavy is the head that wears the hat filled with steel birdshot.

After spending way too much time immersed in the fascinating user reviews of stun guns ("I'm using it as an ignition system for my potato cannon"), I may or may not have purchased protection. You can find out the hard way. But first you'll have to get past the basset hound. ✖✖✖

ON THE SOX SWAP AND THE NFL SEASON

5 THOUGHTS ON THE TRADE

BRAIN TRUST Is Cherington in charge?

Bye-Bye Beckett Josh Beckett finished in the Top 10 in AL Cy Young voting twice during his time with the Sox. Those years? 2007 and 2011. Pretty fitting, right? The season he won Boston's heart and the season he took that heart into the Popeye's bathroom and defecated all over it. So, should we expect a Beckett resurgence out in L.A.? It could happen. But then again: Who cares? Ding dong, the witch is dead.

Adrian Gone-zalez Gonzalez is a former No. 1 overall pick with more talent than just about any baseball player in the world. On a related note, Gonzalez has now been traded four times in his career. Something's not right about that. The man has off-the-charts talent, and the personality of a Fenway brick.

Curtains for Crawford In the end, Carl Crawford played the equivalent of one (almost) full season with the Red Sox: 161 games, 14 homers, 75 RBI, 23 SB, a .292 OBP and a .260 batting average. In other words: Just as depressing as you thought! And really, that's my chief emotion surrounding Crawford. Not anger or frustration. Just depression. He was supposed to be the most exciting and dynamic player to hit Fenway since... maybe ever. Instead, he was barely Darren Bragg.

Who's the Boss? Blowing up the team was a huge step in the right direction, but the work is far from done. The biggest question remaining: Who's leading the charge? Was this trade a sign that ownership is ready to remove Ben Cherington's training wheels, or does he still have to ask Larry Lucchino's permission to use the bathroom? Only time will tell, but let's all join hands and pray for the former.

The Next Step Of all the items on the Sox offseason to-do list, "Trade John Lackey" should be No. 1 in bold, circled and underlined. I don't care if he can still pitch, Lackey represents an aura and an attitude that's held the Sox down for too long. They need a total cleansing in that clubhouse. And with Beckett gone, it's time to part ways with the other drunk skunk.

1 ONE WISH FOR THE SOX

They've freed up nearly $300M in payroll. And at this point, they've got more prospects than they do Major-League-ready talent. So, what's the next big move for the Sox? If it were up to me: Get Felix Hernandez. By any means necessary. (That includes kidnapping.)

2 DRAWN OUT OFFSEASONS

NEED THE GREEN It's been three months since the Celtics were eliminated by the Heat, and it'll be another two before they're back in Miami for the opener. In other words, the offseason is waaay too long. But, hey, the more time KG spends in his cryogenic chamber the better.

IN SEARCH OF BLACK AND GOLD It's hard to believe that the NHL is heading down this road again, but it seems like another lockout—the league's second in seven seasons—is on the horizon. What a shame. What a joke. How long before Tim Thomas blames Obama?

3 NFL Picks

AFC: The Ravens and Steelers are back. The Texans are terrifying when healthy. The Broncos just added a Hall of Fame QB, and the Jets traded for Jesus. But the AFC is still the Pats' to lose, and I don't think they will. Not just because of Brady, but also thanks to a young defense—especially the LBs—who are ready to take things to another level. (But mostly because of Brady.)

NFC: The Packers are the favorites. The Niners are a popular pick. But I'll take the Giants. They've got a championship core, that stacked defensive line and, in Eli Manning, the (gulp) most clutch quarterback in the NFL. The only thing that might stop them is Tom Coughlin snapping and murdering a player on the sideline.

Super Bowl: It's been 18 years since the same two teams have met in consecutive Super Bowls. Only once in the last 12 years has any team made a repeat trip to the big game. So why is this season any different? Because it's my column, damn it, and the Pats have unfinished business. Final Score: Pats 20, Giants 17.

4 DATES TO WATCH

9/9: The Pats kick off the season down in Tennessee, where after months of teasing and foreplay, fans can finally consummate their relationship with Chandler Jones.

9/11: Jacoby Ellsbury turns 29, which means that he'll be 30 next year, which means there's NO WAY the Sox are forking over a long-term deal once he hits the free-agent market.

9/13: The Yankees take the field at Fenway for the last time this season. Well, unless the two teams meet in the playo—no, no. It's definitely the last time.

9/16: The Arizona Cardinals are in town for the Pats' home opener. Prediction 1: Larry Fitzgerald has 12 catches for 175 yards and two TDs. Prediction 2: Pats win, 42-14.

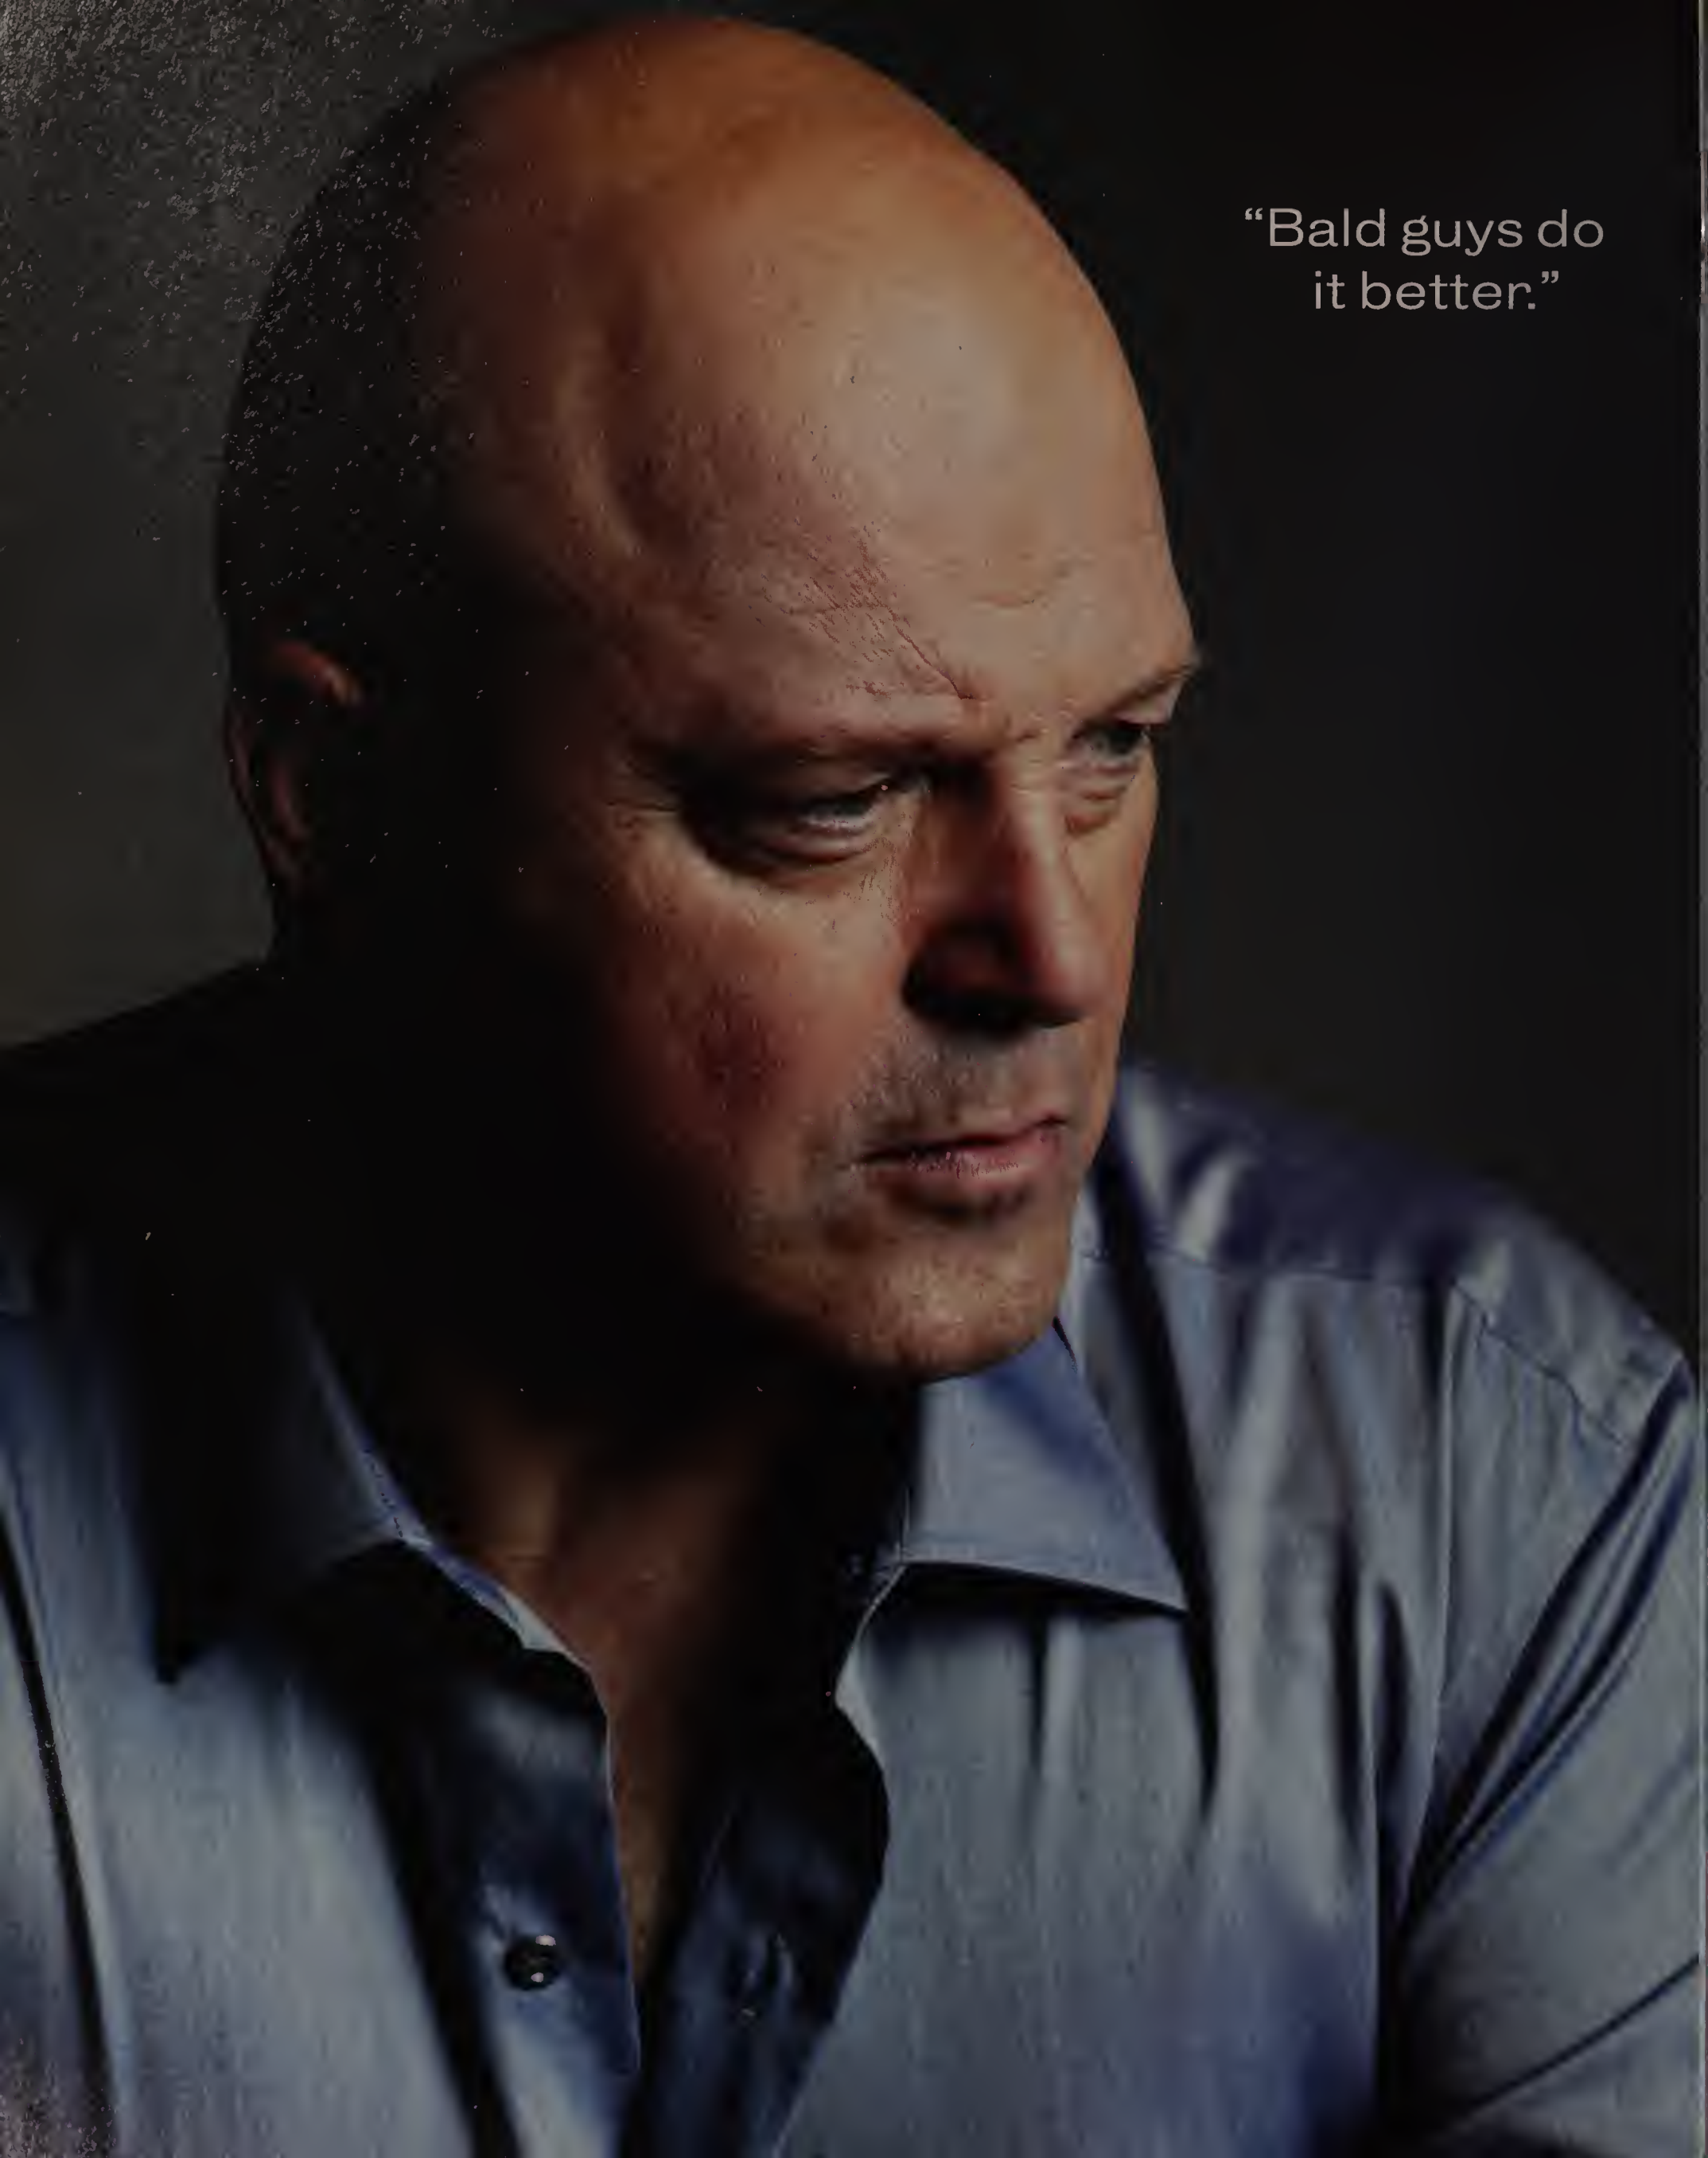
A CELEBRATION OF BELGIAN BEER

Best of Belgium

Belgium is renowned for its vibrant and diverse beer culture. A rich tradition of culinary invention and improvisation, combined with centuries of brewing passion and expertise, helped craft a stunning variety of beer styles enjoyed around the world.



Leffe Blonde was first brewed in 1240 by the monks of Abbaye de Notre Dame de Leffe in Belgium. A spicy, faintly clove-like aroma is balanced by Leffe's creamy body and restrained dry finish.

Stella Artois' rich brewing heritage dates back to 1366 in Leuven, Belgium, where it was first brewed to celebrate the holiday season. Traditional malted barley and the highest quality European hops give Stella Artois its full flavor and delicately crisp finish.

Hoegaarden is the Original Belgian Wheat Beer, dating back to the 15th Century. A naturally cloudy beer, Hoegaarden features a secret to its refreshing flavor and spicy nose: real Curaçao orange peel and a dash of coriander.

Always Enjoy Responsibly.

"Bald guys do it better."

Soroff On MICHAEL CHIKLIS

The actor talks about music, Shield fans and skincare tips for the bald.

LOWELL-BORN, ANDOVER-BRED MICHAEL CHIKLIS, 49, stars in the CBS series Vegas, debuting this month. Known for his lead role in the cop drama The Shield, for which he won both an Emmy and a Golden Globe award, Chiklis earned a bachelor's degree from B.U.'s School of Theatre before appearing in TV shows like No Ordinary Family, The Commish and Daddio. His film credits include playing the Thing in the Fantastic Four franchise, as well as roles in Eagle Eye, Rise, The Tax Man, Last Request, Body and Soul and the John Belushi biopic Wired. This winter, he'll appear in the action feature Parker, and he recently wrapped production on the crime thriller Pawn. As a musician, he released a new single with the Michael Chiklis Band last month. He lives in Los Angeles.

Jonathan Soroff: Is your acting career a support system for your musical aspirations?
Michael Chiklis: Pretty much. Me and my friend Bob Pascarella, who grew up in Andover with me, have been in bands together since we were 12 years old. We always wanted to put something out, but only if we could do it right. Next thing you know, 25 years went by, and he called me one day and said, "We're getting old. Let's make music and not worry about it." So we did, and it all sort of grew organically. The first tune we did ended up on the soundtrack to a movie. The second song we did, we ended up performing live with the Boston Pops last summer.

Do cop shows attract weirder stalkers or groupies?
I don't know about cop shows in general, but The Shield, for sure. [Laughs.] Just the nature of the show, how down and dirty it was. There were certain people who were drawn to it who kind of set me on edge. You've gotta kind of wonder about some of the people drawn to something so dark.

If you had a superpower, what would it be?
Oh, God. That question again! I've answered it 40,000 times, but I've always deferred to strength. It'd be cool to be invincibly strong.

Do you think the Thing needs some Ex-Lax?
[Laughs.] He's definitely wound a little tight.

Does he s rocks?
[Laughs.] Did you really just ask me that? That's something I'm going to leave to your imagination, which is obviously sordid.

Is Bruce Willis the poor man's you?
Oh, please. He's certainly not the poor man between us. He's made a helluva lot more money than I have.

So you got your Actor's Equity card at the age of 13?
My theatrical mentor, Mark Kaufman, cast me in a musical at the Town and Country Playhouse in New Hampshire. We became friends, and he became friends with my parents. One night over dinner, he asked my parents where they went to see top-flight professional theater, and their answer was Boston, which was 45 minutes away. He asked whether we thought the area could sustain it. We all said yes, and that was one of the reasons he founded and became artistic director of Merrimack Repertory Theatre.

If you could tell that teenager one thing, what would it be?
Enjoy it. Don't sweat the small stuff. Don't worry so much. It's going to be really fun. There's a number of other things I'd tell him, too, but I wouldn't tell you. [Laughs.]

Fill in the blank: Bald guys do it _____.
Bald guys do it better... in their minds.

Most friendly set you've ever been on?
The Shield.

Worst sitcom role of your career or something you wish you could wipe off your résumé?
I take it you weren't a big Daddio fan, but I happened to enjoy that gig. I guess the one I wish I could take back would be Soldier.

Where do you keep your Emmy?
It makes a great bookend in my library with the Golden Globe.

Do people ask to rub your head?
All the time!

How many women have tried?
Over the years, hundreds. I tell them it's good luck. Thank God my wife is cool about it.

What's the biggest perk about transitioning from character actor to leading man?
Big Hollywood checks.

So where do you think you fit in the Hollywood pecking order?
There's probably seven rings in Hollywood that you have to go through, and I think that I'm probably through the fifth ring.

Do you write the music or lyrics for your band?
Bob and I usually collaborate on the music. I write all the lyrics and the melodies.

So I'll say it for you: Henry Rollins has got nuthin' on you.
Hey, that's cool. I like Henry. He's a cool dude.

Is Las Vegas sexier than ever?
It's funny, because I'm not a Vegas guy. I've only been there like four times, because there's something about losing money that just bothers me. I remember the first time I was there, a high roller came over to the craps table and dropped like 135 grand in five minutes. As a New England boy, I couldn't help translating that into all the other things you could do with that money. I was apoplectic.

What's one thing that everyone in Boston should go to Lowell for?
To take in a show at the Merrimack Repertory Theatre.

FALL ARTS PREVIEW 2012

LET THE CURTAIN RISE ON THE SEASON'S MOST ANTICIPATED CONCERTS, PLAYS, SHOWS & MORE.

CIRCUS

Les 7 Doigts de la Main's Sequence 8

French-Canadian circuses have long eschewed elephants, lion-tamers and hoops of fire. But instead of Cirque du Soleil's oft-twee whimsy, Montreal's Les 7 Doigts' spectacle is shaped by its spectacular cast: a juggler, two masters of the Korean plank, two crackerjacks of Chinese acrobatics, a duo of hand-to-hand gymnasts and an aerial-hoop specialist.

As individuals, they amaze. But what's most riveting is their teamwork and movements that occur with seemingly telepathic fluidity. One gymnast jolts from another's arms, or vaults and somersaults feet-first into a platform of raised, steady hands. They cluster together to create a human bridge. A performer lithely pulls and catches (it's somehow both) a partner slinking from a trapeze. It's electric.

Les 7 Doigts' name is a spin on the French expression "the five fingers of the hand"—five individual elements striving for the same goal. The "7" stands for the seven founding members of the circus, including Sequence 8 directors, Shana Carroll and Sébastian Soldevila. Their conceit here is one's encounter with the "other," and whether we're defined by it, or against it.

SEQUENCE 8* RUNS SEPT. 27–OCT. 7, $25–$79, AT THE CUTLER MAJESTIC THEATRE, 219 TREMONT ST., BOSTON (617-824-8400) ARTS EMERSON.ORG.

War Horse

It's not just the wrenching narrative that won War Horse five Tony Awards last year, including best play. What steals the show is the craftsmanship—and crazy realism—of this musical's life-size puppet horses.

They're the invention of Adrian Kohler and Basil Jones, cofounders of the South Africa–based Handspring Puppet Company. Each animal is handmade, taking up to 10 months to construct. Bands of flexible, lightweight cane bend to create a ribcage, and nylon stretches as skin. Instead of manipulating strings from the rafters, three puppeteers work within the frame of each horse so that it neighs, perks its ears, flinches and breathes as if alive.

Choreographer Toby Sedgwick is the master behind these movements, while directors Marianne Elliot and Tom Morris adapt Michael Morpurgo's children's story of an English lad who braves WWI battlefields to retrieve his beloved horse. Bring Kleenex.

WAR HORSE* RUNS OCT. 10–21, $25–$145, AT THE BOSTON OPERA HOUSE, 539 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON (617-259-3400) BOSTON.BROADWAY.COM.

JAZZ PERFORMANCE

Chick Corea & Gary Burton Hot House Tour with the Harlem String Quartet

Some folks cash their chips after a streak of massive success. Take Michael Phelps. For others, no amount of glory can justify hanging up their trophies and calling it quits. Over the past 40 years, Chick Corea and Gary Burton have won 23 Grammys and counting. With Burton on vibraphone—aka vibraharp, or the "vibes"—and Corea as pianist, they're a unique hybrid of good vibrations. Melodies freewheel, rhythms coalesce and like the best of coconspirators, they intuit each other's intentions without—literally—skipping a beat.

Corea grew up in Chelsea and Burton taught at Berklee for 30 years, so their Oct. 21 show is a happy homecoming. Joined by the Harlem String Quartet, the duo swings into Symphony Hall to promote their latest album, Hot House, a nod to Tadd Dameron's definitive bebop number of the '40s that's fast and full of improvisation.

THE HOT HOUSE TOUR ARRIVES ON OCT. 21 $30–$75, AT BOSTON SYMPHONY HALL, 301 MASS. AVE., BOSTON (888-266-1200) BSO.ORG.

KEY EVENT Pianist Chick Corea

CLASSICAL PERFORMANCE

Handel and Haydn Society performs Bach's Magnificat

Bach first performed his Magnificat in 1723 during an evening Christmas service in Leipzig, Germany. The ensemble was larger than most at the time, with five soloists and a five-part choir bringing the joyous, lively piece to its zenith.

This October, award-winning conductor Harry Christophers transports the work to Symphony Hall for a performance designed to sound just as Bach intended. The Handel and Haydn Society is considered a pioneer in "historically informed performance," replicating ensemble sizes and instruments from when the pieces were originally written. (In 1723, for example, brass instruments lacked valves). This is purity in D major, "the key of glory."

An hour before curtain, H&H fellow, Teresa Neff, discusses the show, while opening night ends with an encore party at Lucca Back Bay to celebrate H&H's 198th season and the album release of Mozart Coronation Mass.

BACH'S MAGNIFICAT IS ON OCT. 12 AND 14, $20-$84, AT BOSTON SYMPHONY HALL, 301 MASS. AVE., BOSTON (888-266-1200) HANDELANDHAYDN.ORG.

AVANTE-GARDE SHOW

Whistler in the Dark's Tales From Ovid

A bare stage, save for ribbons of blue silk that fall fluidly from the rafters. In the theater's shadowy pockets, cast members blend into the darkness. The setting is ripe for transformation—precisely the theme of Ted Hughes' Tales From Ovid.

War Horse: Brinkhoff/Moegenburg; Chick Corea: C.Taylor Crothers

Hughes was Sylvia Plath's ex-husband and Britain's poet laureate for more than a decade. He adapted Ovid's mythical masterpiece Metamorphoses into Tales From Ovid, a poetic work of his own. Gods commingle with mortals, and jealousy, rejection and inflated egos inspire some particularly damning punishments.

Unencumbered by props, the cast leaps, swings and clambers up the silks, embodying Arachne, Venus, Echo, Narcissus and Atalanta with a spirit imbued by the first lines of Hughes' text, "Now I am ready to tell how bodies are changed / Into different bodies." Due to the dynamism of the small cast—Danny Bryck, Jen O'Connor, Mac Young and Aimee Rose Ranger—it feels as if the ensemble is twice as large.

GRIPPING SCENE Dark in the spotlight

Additional myths have been added to the script since this show first ran in Boston in 2010, including those of Bacchus, and Callisto and Arcas. And unlike the 22 feet between the ceiling and stage in their first venue, the cast will be soaring through 40 feet of air in the Paramount's Black Box Theatre.

TED HUGHES' TALES FROM OVID RUNS NOV. 8–18, $25–$49, AT THE PARAMOUNT CENTER'S JACKIE LIEBERGOTT BLACK BOX THEATRE, 559 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON (617-824-8400) ARTSEMERSON.ORG.

ROCK SHOW

Jack White

After a string of side projects, Jack White—the rock, blues, punk genius behind the White Stripes and one of Rolling Stone's "100 Greatest Guitarists of All Time"—has finally gone solo with Blunderbuss. Released this spring on his label, Third Man Records, it debuted at No. 1 on the U.S. Billboard 200 chart. On tour this fall, he performs new tracks with either the all-female Peacocks or the all-male Buzzards, the band to be announced the day of each show. Obviously, his eccentricity holds: This is a man who released a single via 1,000 airborne flexi-discs stuck to helium balloons.

There's a bit of bleeding to his new lyrics. White says he longs for love to bite him, stab him, slam his fingers and leave him for dead in the song "Love Interruption." Most songs average about three minutes, just long enough for a taste, stirring an ache for what's next.

JACK WHITE PLAYS ON SEPT. 28, $39.50–$59.50, AT THE AGGANIS ARENA, 925 COMM. AVE., BOSTON (617-358-7000) AGGANISARENA.COM.

PASTEL BLUES Jack White comes to the Agganis Arena.

GALLERY SHOW

Boston International Fine Art Show

Bostonians are lucky to be able to cover the art circuit on foot, whether it be on a Sunday stroll down Newbury Street or wending our way—wine in hand—through SoWa's Open Studios on the first Friday of each month. But for a catchall of fine art, mark your calendar for the 16th annual Boston International Fine Art Show. Held in the South End's Cyclorama, 40 galleries showcase and sell paintings, prints, photographs and more.

Massachusetts dealers are well represented, including Vose Galleries, America's oldest family-owned gallery, with more than 150 of its 18th- to 20th-century American realist paintings now found in museums throughout the country. One minute, you can study an Art Deco print from Fusco & Four Modern's inventory. The next, you'll find yourself immersed in a New England seascape from Pierce Galleries. For a sneak peek before the crowds swoop in, check out the festival's Gala Preview, with proceeds benefitting the Friends of the Children-Boston association.

THE BOSTON INTERNATIONAL FINE ART SHOW RUNS NOV. 15–18, $15; FREE, AGES 12 AND UNDER, AT THE CYCLORAMA, 539 TREMONT ST., BOSTON (617-363-0405) FINEARTBOSTON.COM.

DANCE

Boston Ballet's reimagined Nutcracker

The loaded, big Bertha of ballet is, of course, back. It's been performed in Boston since 1965, and for the past 16 years we saw sets by Helen Pond and Herbert Senn, with costumes by David Walker and Charles Heightchew. Consistency was part of its charm. But this year brings an exciting change, as Boston Ballet premieres a completely revamped holiday favorite.

You'll still hear Tchaikovsky's score. You'll still see the Boston Ballet troupe. But this season marks the infusion of artistic director Mikko Nissinen's own choreography, with entirely new costumes by Robert Perdziola, veteran of the Metropolitan Opera and the Juilliard School of Drama. Look for the pale hues of Act I's party dresses and the transition of color as Clara awakens from her dream.

THE NUTCRACKER* RUNS NOV. 23–DEC. 30, $35–$167, AT THE BOSTON OPERA HOUSE, 539 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON (617-695-6955) BOSTONBALLET.ORG.

STAGE DRAMA
Huntington Theatre's Good People

Playwright David Lindsay-Abaire grew up in Southie on West Fifth Street, back when the neighborhood was strictly working-class Irish Catholic. He frequented what's now a Boys & Girls Club where two staff members advocated for his scholarship to Milton Academy. Lindsay-Abaire went on to study at Sarah Lawrence, then at the Playwrights Program at the Juilliard School. In 2007, he won a Pulitzer Prize for Rabbit Hole, starring Cynthia Nixon (who won a Tony for best actress), and which he later adapted into a movie starring Nicole Kidman.

Good People brings the writer back to his roots. His story about class tension is timely and instantly recognizable: Margie lives paycheck to paycheck and just lost another job as a Dollar Store cashier; we hold our breath as she revisits a now-wealthy ex who left Southie to settle in Chestnut Hill.

Directed by Acton native Kate Whoriskey, the play asks, what's the formula for success? Is it about hard work with the occasional stroke of luck? Who gets ahead (and how), and what are we willing to do to catch a break?

GOOD PEOPLE* RUNS SEPT. 14–OCT. 14, $30–$95, AT THE HUNTINGTON THEATRE, 264 HUNTINGTON AVE., BOSTON (617-266-0800) HUNTINGTONTHEATRE.ORG.

STAGE COMEDY
Marie Antoinette

If you were lucky enough to experience the immersive Sleep No More in the fall of '09—each ornately decorated room the setting for a new scene, actors disappearing down hallways and snatching members of the audience into closets—you already know what the American Repertory Theater is capable of staging. And since last year's The Gershwins' Porgy and Bess, we've come to anticipate each new production as the next big Boston smash.

Marie Antoinette is this year's top contender. Written by David Adjmi (who made last year's New Yorker list for the "Top 10 in Culture") and starring Brooke Bloom of Extremely Loud & Incredibly Close as the high-wigged, "let them eat cake" queen, it brings a fresh take on the old tale of class warfare and decapitation. Karole Armitage, recently of Cirque du Soleil, choreographs and Rebecca Taichman directs.

MARIE ANTOINETTE* RUNS THROUGH SEPT. 29, $25–$65, AT THE LOEB DRAMA CENTER, 64 BRATTLE ST., CAMBRIDGE (617-547-8300) AMERICANREPERTORYTHEATER.ORG.

Boston Film Festival

It's been a while since we heard much about the Massachusetts film boom. While the 28th annual Boston Film Festival may not resuscitate dreams of Hollywood East, it does keep indie filmmaking in focus. Arguably the biggest buzz this year is for The Sessions. Slated to screen mid-festival, the Fox Searchlight production made a splash at Sundance and is already being mentioned as an Oscar contender for its script and lead actor, John Hawkes (of Winter's Bone and Martha Marcy May Marlene). Based on a true story, it follows a man in an iron lung who wants to lose his virginity at the age of 38. So he hires a "sex surrogate," played by Helen Hunt. What follows is less a Judd Apatow farce than a nuanced, and moving, comedy.

Screenings will be held in Theatre 1 at the Revere Hotel, which recently underwent an invigorating facelift that gave it a Dolby Digital sound system and a 30-foot Super Glo screen. Although festival organizers are still hammering out the final schedule and ticket pricing, they shared the following: Typically, two films screen per night, beginning at 7 pm. After each screening, filmmakers and some of the talent will be on-site for Q&A sessions.

THE BOSTON FILM FESTIVAL RUNS SEPT. 20–24, AT THE REVERE HOTEL, 200 STUART ST., BOSTON (617-523-8388) BOSTONFILMFESTIVAL.ORG.

MUSEUM EXHIBIT
Mario Testino at the MFA

When it comes to the British royal family, no photographer has gotten closer than Mario Testino. Starting from a long-ago snapshot of Queen Elizabeth and Prince Edward celebrating a wedding, Testino has applied his keen sense of composition and glamour to everything from Princess Diana's 1997 Vanity Fair cover to Will and Kate's engagement photos. Many of these are on display, along with other intimate shots, from October through June at the MFA.

Testino's second exhibit, In Your Face, immerses visitors in the world of high fashion. Testino has shot Madonna for Versace, Kate Moss for virtually everything and Angelina Jolie for Vogue. His images allow viewers to voyeuristically rub elbows with the rich and famous.

MARIO TESTINO'S BRITISH ROYAL PORTRAITS RUNS OCT. 21–JUNE 16, 2013, AND IN YOUR FACE RUNS OCT. 21–FEB. 3 2013, $25, AT THE MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS, 465 HUNTINGTON AVE., BOSTON (800-440-6975) MFA.ORG.

STEREOTYPES ARE STRAW MEN. TODAY'S RUGBY PLAYERS LEAD A CHARGE TOWARD A TRULY INCLUSIVE SPORT.

TACKLING THE ISSUES

TWO HOURS INTO A grueling practice, members of the Boston Maccabi Rugby Club are divided into three groups and ordered to run at 75 to 80 percent of their maximum ability around Newton's Cold Spring Park. On a course marked by a soccer goal and a giant oak tree, the first loop is 330 yards, the second 220 yards and the last is 110 yards, each group earning a brief rest while the other two are running. Hands on hips, scowling in the heat, the three packs finish in fast succession, huffing loudly and sweating like mules. Someone calls the players in and they trot back, their voices carrying across the park.

This fall, the Maccabis will embark on their inaugural season in the New England Rugby Football Union, or NERFU, competing with 33 other senior men's clubs.

"Can we move away from this puddle?" asks a bearded guy.

"I didn't realize you were so sensitive," says a teammate.

"These are real leather," says the bearded guy, pointing to his cleats. Everyone laughs.

Long considered a niche sport in the U.S., rugby has been added to the 2016 summer Olympics in Brazil and recently raised its profile with a national TV contract. For those who know the sport—or think they do—rugby is a boozy and boorish college weirdness, a sort of alt-frat for oddballs that dematerializes at graduation. But men's club rugby, especially here in Boston, has become a model for social justice, volunteerism and youth development. It's poised to become the next hot pastime, with upbeat, irreverent characters and a culture offering a bracing alternative to the corporate sterility of mainstream American sport. Sure, players drink and, occasionally, fight. But if the members of two local clubs are any indicator, these guys should be running our civilization.

A YEAR AGO, ALEX Goldstein, 28, who played at Brandeis, decided he wanted to start playing rugby again. He also wanted to donate more of his time to public service and become more active in the Jewish community. He then took his three goals and combined them by founding the Maccabis.

"Spare time is hard to come by, and I want to maximize it," says the square-built Goldstein, who works as the director of Governor Deval Patrick's political action committee. So he made some phone calls, recruiting players and drafting a club philosophy. About half of his club's members are Jewish, and the team motto, screened onto their jerseys, is Hebrew: L'sachek, which means, "to play," and L'sharet, "to serve."

Some of the Maccabis at Cold Spring Park have significant rugby experience, but many have been drawn from other sports. Shirtless in the dense, humid air, Goldstein announces, "I shaved my chest yesterday, but it's all back." Over the ensuing laughter, he asks the other players to introduce themselves. After a few guys speak up, a tall sturdy fellow says, "I'm Brendan, and I'm not Jewish," to more laughs.

Brendan Ryan, 31, is one of the club's consistent scorers, though he's been playing rugby less than a year. He was a wide receiver on the football team at St. Sebastian's School in Needham, an all-boys' Catholic school. With his friend Goldstein standing nearby, Ryan notes that during their first few matches, the team would huddle up, bunch their fists and shout, "One, two, three: Jew!" which he says was "a little over the top."

"We should get a hardcore rabbi as our mascot," says Ryan.

Goldstein laughs. "That conversation—whether we were going to be exclusively Jewish or not—was over in seconds," he says. "The answer was, absolutely not. We're an all-inclusive team."

In fact, inclusion and tolerance are ingrained not only in this club, but in the very sport. Rugby clubs are like big dysfunctional families, as individuals from vastly different backgrounds are forged into a cohesive unit through playing such an arduous game. As a rugger, no matter your station in life, you're never a member of a class. You're just a rugby player, pure and simple.

In that sense, rugby is egalitarian, transcending education, income and social standing; beyond even race, gender and religion. Ask any rugger, and he or she will tell you that, amidst the hurly-burly of the game, other players' characteristics vanish. All that matters is the color of your jersey.

"In rugby, you have to recognize the worth of every person on the pitch, or you'll lose," Goldstein says.

Practicing over at Moakley Park in Southie, Boston Ironsides looks like any other rugby club: black guys, white guys; tall and lanky; short and powerful; some quick, shifty types; a few obvious weight-lifters; a contingent of lumpy, bearded men.

A former college hurdler, Nick Limerick, 33, has been playing rugby for three years. Formerly Ironsides' president, Limerick now serves as treasurer for I.G.R.A.B., the International Gay Rugby Association and Board. Forty-two rugby clubs on three continents belong to I.G.R.A.B., which is dedicated to the international advancement of gay and inclusive rugby. In fact, although the club is gay, some 25 percent of the Ironsides are straight.

Citing rugby's potential as a "vehicle for social change," Limerick says he took up the sport because of its famous camaraderie. "You can identify with [opposing players] because you're going through the same experience," he says.

His teammate, Izzy Berdan, agrees. "The Maccabis have their religious subset, and we have 'the people that we sleep with' subset, but when you go onto the rugby pitch, that all disappears," says Berdan, 34, who's been playing for the Ironsides since 2005.

Growing up in Alice, Texas, Berdan was goalie on his high-school soccer team but felt pigeonholed as "the big gay kid." Now 6' 3" and 303 pounds, Berdan has found a home in the Ironsides scrum, and in the rugby world at large.

In a game, "you're committed to throwing your body around, so when you're looking at the other team, you put yourself on the same plane," says Berdan, creative director for the Aquitaine restaurant group. "I don't think people start to judge other people until they lose respect for them. When I look at a bunch of ruggers, I know we've all gone through the same things. I have respect for everyone on that field."

By playing in NERFU, a "straight" rugby union, Limerick says, "We're not sequestered in a 'league of our own.'" Additionally, the club has performed community service by having gay and straight members visit schools to talk about gay athletes and bullying.

"It's central to the growth of the sport that clubs make contributions to their communities, on the field and off," says Goldstein.

To that end, on July 7, during a game between the Red Sox and Yankees at Fenway Park, Maccabi players sold raffle tickets to benefit the Red Sox Foundation, which runs several programs for inner city kids and donates more than $7 million annually to other nonprofit organizations. Volunteer groups average $8,000 in raffle ticket sales at each Red Sox home game, according to Justin Prettyman, senior program manager for the foundation. Wearing their team jerseys and advancing through the crowd "with the attitude that they wouldn't be deterred," the Maccabis raised $11,800.

"They were energetic and naturally competitive," he adds. "And who can say no to a cauliflower ear?" This was the foundation's first experience with a rugby club and Prettyman says he was impressed with the Maccabis' "go-getter attitude."

Rugby is quickly becoming "part of the public conversation," agrees Bill Good, 63, president of the Massachusetts Youth Rugby Organization. This year, 1,200 kids are playing youth rugby in the Commonwealth, up from three or four hundred a few years ago, Good says. "At the high school and college levels, we're asking our kids to help coach at the youth level, and tutor the youth [academically] on other days. The service piece is part of the culture of the game."

Rugby is "the most democratic game in the world," says Good. "It doesn't matter what you do 'outside.' When you step on the field, everyone's equal. And the guys who play at the highest level have respect for those at the lower levels. "

As for actually banging heads on the pitch, this year, the Ironsides will play the Maccabis on Saturday, Oct. 13 at Moakley Park. Maccabis player Mark Baglin, 50, who grew up in Birmingham, England, has dubbed this first match between the clubs "the Bigotry Bowl," while Brendan Ryan prefers "the Stereotype Bowl."

"The gays versus the Jews—that's the game everyone wants to see," laughs Goldstein.

"By and large, we don't take ourselves too seriously," says Limerick.

They do, however, take pride in their results. Last June, the Ironsides went 4-2 playing in the biannual Mark Kendall Bingham Memorial Tournament in Manchester, England. Named for a gay rugby player who helped overpower the terrorists on United Flight 93 on 9/11, the tournament featured 38 international gay-inclusive teams, including clubs from rugby powerhouses Australia, Ireland and England. In May, the Maccabis made the finals of NERFU's annual division four tournament in Newport, R.I., losing to Cape Cod RFC 16-14 in sudden death.

Relative upstarts in NERFU, the Maccabis and Ironsides are looking forward to their match. "It's like one of those 800-pound gorillas," says Ironsides' president Wiremu Kiwi'au-diaz, 35, who grew up playing rugby in Perth, Australia. "Nobody wants to lose to the quote-unquote 'gay' team."

No matter the outcome, the two clubs will meet afterwards at the Alley, a gay bar near Government Center. But for one night, at least, it'll simply be a rugby bar. ✖✖✖

GOODNESS SAKE

THE ASIAN FOOD SCENE is growing, and while diners are happy to pile more on their plate, many are unsure about what to pour into their glasses. Nancy Cushman is here to help. After opening O Ya in 2007 with her husband, Tim, Cushman traveled to Japan to complete the advanced sake professional course—she's one of fewer than 100 people in the world to earn the certification. This fall, she and O Ya manager Alyssa DiPasquale lead two classes on tasting and pairing Japanese rice wine with some of the restaurant's best dishes. Students will learn to order like a pro—and leave with the confidence of a sake sensei. CAROLINE PRADERIO

Sake 101 classes take place on Sept. 15 and Oct. 20 at 2 pm, $125, O Ya, 9 East St., Boston (617-654-9900) oyarestaurantboston.com

Still Running

The Kite's Tale

Prejudice and regret drive The Kite Runner, the tragic story of two childhood friends separated by brutality. Set during the rise of the Taliban, the drama follows Amir Qadiri as he struggles to repent for abandoning Hassan, who was born into a class deemed socially inferior. Playwright Matthew Spangler brings Khaled Hosseini's best-seller to the stage, staying faithful to the novel's controversial story set during a period of civil unrest in Afghanistan. The Kite Runner opens at Arsenal Center for the Arts on Sept. 9.

Movies Edited by Hannah Sheinberg

Reviews by Sean Burns

The Amazing Spider-Man ★ ½ It's déjà vu all over again in this lazy, rote retelling of the web slinger's origin story, rebooted a mere 10 years since Sam Raimi's effervescent adaptation just for the sole purpose of allowing Sony to keep the movie rights. That's correct, it's a film that exists only as contract extension, and this two-and-a-half hour slog feels as inspired as that sounds. The Social Network's Andrew Garfield pouts and poses, as the title role has been recast as a somber Twilight-type haunted by his missing parents (who are teased to figure prominently in a sequel that's scheduled to hit theaters in 2014). That's the rub with modern franchise filmmaking: Everybody's too busy planning for subsequent installments that they forget to tell a coherent story in the first. Director Marc Webb, who debuted with (500) Days of Summer, has no sense of pacing or visual bravado, and the movie often grinds to a halt on curiously empty NYC streets. (In the suburbs.)

The Avengers ★★★ It was a rough takeoff. After five movies of buildup, the often crummy (see Thor, Iron Man 2, The Incredible Hulk) but occasionally wonderful (Captain America: The First Avenger) Marvel Films' strategy of building a bridge to nowhere at last pays off with a rock 'em, sock 'em, superhero spectacular, in which Earth's mightiest heroes team up to take on an alien invasion in midtown Manhattan. Playing out like a fanboy's nocturnal emission, we finally get to see what would happen if Iron Man fought Thor. But what makes the picture click is writer/director Joss Whedon's knack for snappy banter, as he supplies killer one-liners to Robert Downey Jr.'s debauched Tony Stark and plays to the fissure between Mark Ruffalo's laid-back line readings and his gigantic green alter ego. Massively scaled, coldly impersonal set pieces abound, but the character interactions zing. Whedon isn't much of an action director, but he's gifted with an overqualified cast and allows them to quip away to their hearts' content. (In the suburbs.)

Beasts of the Southern Wild ★★★★ This Sundance sensation is one of the most poignant things I've ever seen. A portrait of a poor New Orleans community bracing for Hurricane Katrina, Beasts of the Southern Wild is so infused with fanciful flourishes that most of the time it feels like Days of Heaven by way of The Road Warrior. Young Quvenzhané Wallis stars as six-year-old Hushpuppy, who lives with her alcoholic father (Dwight Henry) in a junkyard community called the Bathtub. Director Benh Zeitlin drops us into this world with no explanation, and it may take a while to adjust to the harsh environment and oddball speech patterns. Oh, and there are also recently unfrozen, prehistoric aurochs roaming through the proceedings. It's a purposefully abstract piece, never a movie about "poverty" or "Katrina," but about something much harder to pin down. Eventually, it all comes down to Hushpuppy's indomitable spirit and a final shot that sends you soaring out of the theater. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Bourne Legacy ★ In 2007, Matt Damon and director Paul Greengrass brought amnesiac assassin Jason Bourne home to New York City with a smashing finale to a trilogy that only got better as it went along. Five years later, for no discernible reason other than a quick buck, series screenwriter Tony Gilroy cashes in with a superfluous franchise reboot, starring Jeremy Renner because classy Matt Damon wouldn't touch this garbage with a 10-foot pole. Renner stars as a chemically enhanced soldier targeted for elimination by the same old gang of white guys in front of computer screens. The catch is, Renner needs to find some more government-issued smart pills, otherwise, this superspy becomes super dumb. Call it Code Name: Algernon. The pacing is dead, and the structure is a disaster, as the story introduces an antagonist in the final reel—during a climactic chase—that would've arrived 40 minutes into any competent movie. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Celeste and Jesse Forever ★★ ½ Considering it's one of those vanity projects in which TV actors try to break into film by making a Sundance entry about the relationships of well-off urbanites, Rashida Jones' screenwriting debut isn't half bad. Or at least it's agreeable in that mode of movies that rip off When Harry Met Sally in the way When Harry Met Sally ripped off Annie Hall. Jones stars as a high-strung PR type who recently divorced her longtime sweetheart (Andy Samberg) even though they've remained best friends, and he still bums around in the guesthouse. It's clear their chummy arrangement has kept them from moving on, at least until the plot contrives to have him deal with accidental fatherhood after a fling. The kicker is that sometimes people grow into the person you always wanted them to be after your time together is over—a melancholy conceit that this affable, sitcom-y picture doesn't quite figure out how to handle. (Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Cosmopolis ★★★★ In a deliciously sick joke at the expense of Twi-hards everywhere, Robert Pattinson stars as a zombified billionaire cruising across the island of Manhattan in a limousine that feels like a cocoon. Director David Cronenberg's astonishing adaptation of Don DeLillo's novel is so dense you can hardly take it all in with just a single viewing. Though most of the dialogue is almost verbatim from DeLillo's book, the story is imbued with the same dreamy, mordantly funny air as Cronenberg's Naked Lunch. With a wry sense of impending doom, this is an ice-cold, woozy nightmare of a movie. The sleek limo becomes a sort of purgatory, as the protagonist glides ever-forward toward ruin. Like all the best Cronenberg pictures, Cosmopolis is a pitch-black comedy about man's

Last Call

Closing Time

The opening line of Shut Up and Play the Hits captures the mindset of dance-punk band LCD Soundsystem. Upon booking its final concert at Madison Square Garden, the sentiment is: "If it's a funeral, let's have the best funeral ever." In their documentary, directors Will Lovelace and Dylan Southern follow LCD's epic exit from the music industry. While navigating the seas of screaming audiences, the film reveals the conflicted mindset of founder and front man James Murphy, who made the decision to pull the band's plug at the height of its popularity. Rock out at the Brattle Theatre Sept. 14–19. Alexis Cheney foolhardy attempt to impose order on the chaos of nature. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

The Expendables 2 ★★★ Of course it's garbage. Though the original was a surprise smash in 2010, Sylvester Stallone makes the sequel—a throwback to pre-CGI days, when manly men delivered terrible one-liners while laying waste to foreign countries—with an unnecessary gloss. The appeal of the first Expendables had a lot to do with Stallone's low-rent filmmaking style, but here he's handed the reins to Con Air director Simon West, who puts far too much of a slick Hollywood polish on the proceedings. Yet my heart still swelled with joy when I watched the icons of my youth blowing stuff up, shredding henchmen with automatic weapon fire and stealing each other's catchphrases. Like I said, garbage, but my favorite kind of garbage. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Hope Springs ★★ ½ Tommy Lee Jones' rumpled poker face gets one hell of a workout in this almost-decent tale of marriage counseling by The Devil Wears Prada director David Frankel. Meryl Streep stars as a sexually frustrated housewife who signs herself and her hubby (Jones) up for intensive couples therapy in a Maine resort town. Steve Carell plays the shrink dead straight, smartly allowing questions about companionship and sex to ricochet off Streep's and Jones' sublime reaction shots. More melancholy than expected, Hope Springs wonders what happens when the thrill is gone. The movie takes the unfulfilled libidos of its AARP couple seriously, and it's unusual to see such frankness regarding characters of a certain age. (Meryl Streep gives oral? In a movie theater?) Unfortunately, Frankel is still a terrible filmmaker, and he slathers the soundtrack with a catalog of overplayed pop standards and resorts to a hokey montage every 10 minutes or so. Streep is predictably marvelous, but Jones' gruff, deadpan bleats steal the picture. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Lawless ★★ In case you'd finally sorted out all of Bane's muffled, fey-Connery proclamations in The Dark Knight Rises, director John Hillcoat's Lawless provides another challenge in Tom Hardy dialogue recognition. Lawless is based on Matt Bondurant's 2008 book, The Wettest County in the World, an account of his family's bloody romp through the moonshine business in the 1930s. Scripted by murder balladeer Nick Cave—who previously collaborated with Hillcoat on The Proposition in 2005—Lawless seems torn between being a fanciful gangster melodrama and a harsher, more punitive film. Nobody wins. Hardy stars as the almost mythological Forrest, a quiet inspiration of terror among neighborhood locals, all of whom buy into the legend that he's some kind of immortal. (He's Tom Hardy, after all.) Playing the runt of the Bondurant litter, Shia LaBeouf is such a contemporary screen presence that you keep expecting him to whip out an iPhone and start texting from behind the wheel of his jalopy. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Magic Mike ★★★ ½ Director Steven Soderbergh's sideways take on Channing Tatum's origin story finds pathos beneath the beefcake. Inspired more by Saturday Night Fever than The Full Monty, it gyrates comfortably alongside Soderbergh's The Girlfriend Experience as a detached portrait of sex workers in a floundering economy. Tatum's goofy, aging stripper is suddenly forced to reevaluate a life of go-nowhere day jobs and boogie nights once he recruits the Kid (Alex Pettyfer) into his backstage world of manscaped pelvic thrusts. There are threesomes and drugs. But, as usual, Soderbergh eyes it all with clinical reserve, aiming for a painterly sociological study of a cash-only subculture living for the moment, because tomorrow is something that requires equity and an acceptance that dangles beyond the characters' grasps. Lording over them all is Matthew McConaughey in a showstopping turn as the slightly sinister, self-parodying club owner whose delusional grandeur suggests a bare-chested Mephistopheles. Between bumps and grinds, the film has a lot to say about class structure in America today. (In the suburbs.)

Moonrise Kingdom ★★★★ Director Wes Anderson's dollhouse sets and Peanuts costumes can sometimes distract from the pathos and heartbreak lurking beneath the surface of his twee tales of damaged men who refuse to grow up. While Moonrise Kingdom is Anderson's most meticulously designed picture, it's also his most emotionally accessible. Riffing on the young-lovers-on-the-lam genre (with plenty of shout-outs to Badlands and Pierrot Le Fou), the film finds star-crossed 12-year-olds running away from home on the fictional New England island of New Penzance during the summer of 1965. The adults in pursuit are a classically broken bunch, with Edward Norton as a scoutmaster out of his league, Bill Murray as a cuckold in denial and the pitch-perfect Bruce Willis as a heartbroken cop called "the sad dumb policeman" behind his back. Shot in gorgeously grainy Super 16mm, Moonrise Kingdom alternates between the flush of first love and the ache of middle-aged compromise. Just lovely. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

ParaNorman ★★★ ½ ParaNorman doesn't strive to replicate Steven Spielberg's 1980s Amblin Entertainment pictures. It just naturally belongs in that group. From Laika studios (who brought us Coraline a few years back), this is a rousing adventure full of big scares, goofy humor and a pointed message. It's like what The Goonies might've been, if The Goonies had been beautifully animated and not terrible. Kodi Smit-McPhee voices the title character, Norman Babcock, a lonely adolescent outsider with a Chia-pet hairdo who sees dead people. It's unfair to reveal more, as the surprise and delight of Chris Butler's screenplay lies in its sharp turns. That's the unexpectedly thoughtful thing about ParaNorman. The movie keeps upending your expectations, urging you to look beyond the surface. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Premium Rush ★★ ½ With a title more befitting of an energy drink, writer/director David Koepp's stripped-down, ticking-clock thriller is one of those time-wasters that's just good enough for passing a late-summer evening. Joseph Gordon-Levitt cements his nascent star status as Wilee "the Coyote"—a bike messenger zipping through rush hour traffic at unfathomable speeds. But on one particularly crappy Friday, Wilee finds himself delivering an envelope that's wanted by a belligerent cop with dental problems. Michael Shannon, our broken cuckoo clock of a character actor, plays this endlessly confounded doofus. Obviously, Wilee is really the Road Runner, as he frantically pedals his way out of one death trap after another, with only occasional pauses for pesky stuff like exposition. Premium Rush is non-stop action with a brightly colored, throwback gloss, reminiscent of the low-stakes VHS tapes of a forgotten era. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Queen of Versailles ★★★ ½ Originally intended as a snickering portrait of the grotesquely wealthy David and Jackie Siegel's quest to build the biggest, tackiest homestead in the history of real estate, director Lauren Greenfield's research lucked into a recession, and the economic collapse transformed a bit of reality-show lookie-loo into a strangely empathetic depiction of what happens when billionaires are suddenly forced to live like mere millionaires. Once, Siegel was the nation's most successful Florida time-share hustler, selling dreams of luxury to those who could barely afford them. But the chickens come home to roost with a vengeance after 2008's Wall Street disaster, and his adorably dim-witted trophy wife, Jackie, with breasts inflated to the size of basketballs, never quite grasps the enormity of the cataclysm. You can tell how much time has gone by in this picture by the amount of dog crap littering the carpet, as the couple's absurd manse lapses into decay. Their plight becomes America's writ large, except more tasteless. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Ted ★★ ½ Much like writer/director Seth MacFarlane's animated-TV shows, Ted is hysterical, until all of a sudden it isn't anymore. As most comedies these days revolve around man-children refusing to grow up, give MacFarlane credit for taking the gag to its logical conclusion and casting Mark Wahlberg as a 30-something who can't let go of his teddy bear. That the stuffed animal is a walking, talking drug user is only half of the joke. Seeking to settle down with his girlfriend, played by Mila Kunis—who unfortunately is presented as the same tired scold we see in most films in which women aren't allowed to be funny—Wahlberg's dopey meathead routine is a brilliant match for a perverted bear. Like all MacFarlane comedies, Ted leans mainly on non sequiturs and pop-culture references. His jokes rely on recognition, not wit. Still, it's all amusing for an hour or so, until it decides to have a plot. The third act is just stuffing. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

To Rome With Love ★★ ½ Last year's Midnight in Paris was profound in a breezy way. To Rome With Love is just plain breezy, but I didn't mind. Charming, second-tier Woody Allen, the film is a mashup of four disconnected shorts. (The picture sometimes feels as though Allen was rifling through his desk and came across some unfinished New Yorker pieces and decided to fashion them after the Italian omnibus films of the 1960s.) It's good to see Allen back on screen, kvetching and complaining his way through a Roman holiday when he discovers a brilliant opera singer who can only perform in the shower. There's some silliness with Roberto Benigni as an everyman who becomes inexplicably famous, and some bawdy jokes by Penélope Cruz as one of Allen's genius prostitutes. Best in show goes to Alec Baldwin as an aging architect revisiting his wayward youth and watching a younger version of himself make all the same mistakes. Clumsily stitched together, To Rome With Love is a trifle, but it's an agreeable one. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Rush Hour

Don't Kill the Messenger

Joseph Gordon-Levitt plays a bike courier chased by a crooked cop in Premium Rush.

Total Recall ★ ½ The punch line to director Len Wiseman's pointless remake of Arnold Schwarzenegger's campy 1990 gorefest is that you'll have forgotten most of it before you even get out of the parking lot. That's kind of sad when your movie is supposed to be about memories. Colin Farrell blands down his livewire tendencies as the dull Douglas Quaid, a workaday prole in a dystopian future who signs up for a fake-memory head trip. Suddenly, he's a secret agent saving the world! Paul Verhoeven's original (very freely adapted from a Philip K. Dick short story) was no masterpiece, but at least it teased us with the idea that what we were watching might be just Quaid's fantasy. At least that approach almost explained away all the lurid, hyper-sexualized violence. Wiseman leaves no room for ambiguity, and his bloodless, PG-13 action sequences barely even register on-screen. It's a stiff, enervating film. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

2 Days in New York ★★★ With Before Sunrise and Before Sunset and now this follow-up to her 2007 directorial debut, 2 Days in Paris, Julie Delpy may be the only person making sequels to romantic comedies. Judging from the goofy, effervescent results, maybe she's the only person who should be allowed to. Having ditched the tiresome Adam Goldberg sometime in between the two pictures, Delpy's endearingly neurotic photographer now finds herself settled down with a buttoned-up public radio host played by Chris Rock. But their domestic tranquility is shattered by a visit from her nutzoid family, with Delpy's real-life father, Albert, once again repris-

ing his role as her horny, ill-mannered old man. There's also a slatternly sister with a sleazebag old boyfriend in tow, yet what's funniest about the movie is Rock's counterintuitive turn as the straight man. He's got some delightful slow-burns here, often only confessing his exasperation to a cardboard cut-out of Barack Obama. It's an extremely silly confection, but I fell for it. (At Kendall Square.)

Nicki Bluhm got her start when Tim Bluhm, front man for the Mother Hips, heard her singing at a New Year's Eve party. First he asked for her hand onstage, then he asked for it in marriage. They now wow crowds with fluid harmonies and poignant country-rock under the moniker of Nicki Bluhm and the Gramblers. Sounding like a modern day Linda Ronstadt, Bluhm leads the six-member band on stages shared with talents like Susan Tedeschi, Josh Ritter and Chris Robinson. Catch them at the Middle East Upstairs on Sept. 16. Alexis Cheney

Time Warp

Naval Gazing

When photographer John Chervinsky set out to create his series Studio Physics, he found a way to take the concept of time—and the practice of outsourcing—to a new dimension. Chervinsky sent cropped subsets of his images to painting factories in China, then waited for the reproductions to arrive. Weeks later, he restaged the original photos with the anonymous artwork included. The resulting works document life's subtle changes. In the days that it takes for the paintings to return stateside, bananas brown, flowers wilt, balloons deflate and time marches ceaselessly forward. Studio Physics is on display at the Ellen Miller Gallery through Oct. 9. Caroline Praderio

Dumb Luck

The Road to Love

Davy Rothbart can't seem to find Mrs. Right. Anywhere. Driving cross-country multiple times for the many girls of his dreams, Rothbart constantly misses his chance for the right relationship, but he never gives up looking for the perfect one. In My Heart Is an Idiot, the hopeless romantic locates humor in the hidden places on his quest for love. Rothbart, founder of Found Magazine, comes to Boston with his brother, Peter, to share their stories and recent discoveries for the website, which showcases misplaced treasures from around the country. On Sept. 12 at Brookline Booksmith, the Rothbarts remind their followers that the most important things turn up when you follow your heart, no matter how idiotic it is. Brigid Wright

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

BISTRO DU MIDI [272 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-426-7878, bistrodumidi.com] Bistro du Midi showcases authentic Provencal cuisine in a warm, welcoming, and beautiful setting. Inspired by the ingredients and culinary techniques of the Midi region in France, Executive Chef, Robert Sisca presents modern, ingredient-driven creations that are at once refined and approachable. From a carefully conceived charcuterie selection to the freshest seafood, meats and vegetables, Bistro du Midi brings the simple, clean and bold flavors of Provence to Boston.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

THE PURPLE SHAMROCK [1 Union Street, Boston, 617-227-2060, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the freedom trail across from Boston City Hall on Union Street. The Purple Shamrock is the perfect place to stop by and have a bite to eat. The fare is composed of New England specialties with burgers, sandwiches, hearty pastas, fresh seafood, tender steaks and other great favorites. Let's not forget their infamous Shamrock Brunch served every Saturday and Sunday that is often paired with live music. After dark, The Purple Shamrock has nightly entertainment with a mix of live music, karaoke and DJ's. At The Purple Shamrock there is something for everyone.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

Beer Specialty

BRUNCH

THE BILTMORE BAR & GRILL [1205 Chestnut Street, Newton, 617-527-2550, thebiltmoregrill.com] Opened at the start of Prohibition, the Biltmore started out as a speakeasy and has been a neighborhood favorite in Newton's historic Upper Falls ever since. Brunch is served Saturday, Sunday and Monday holidays featuring creative menu items such as Huevos Tacos, Sausage Fritter Sandwich and Biltmore's famous Chicken & Waffles. Brunch libations such as the Danish Bloody Mary and Red Beer (The Cure!) help ease your way into the day.

LOCAL 149 [149 P Street, South Boston, 617-269-0900, local149.com] A neighborhood joint in South Boston's Citypoint, Local 149 offers historic roots and lots of heart & soul. Brunch is served Saturdays and Sundays featuring new classics from Chef Leah DuBois such as "Toast To Life and Bacon" and the "Lobster MacMuffin". 'Spicy Pimento Cheese Fries' and 'Dixie Chicken" start the day right washed down with a Bucket of High Life ponies or the $5 Milkshake.

MOOO.... [15 Beacon Street, Boston, 617-670-2515, mooorestaurant.com] In the shadow of Beacon Hill's lofty State House and within the grandeur of the XV Beacon Hotel is MOOO...., a steakhouse extraordin-aire. Chef David Hutton offers a modern approach of fine selected meat and seafood dishes. Breakfast and lunch weekdays, dinner daily, Sunday brunch, bar and lounge. An impressive Wine Cellar and discreet Parlor Suites are the solution to successful business entertaining and private dining. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] "Beer's not just for breakfast anymore." At the Sunset Super Sunday Brewers Brunch, try our thick-cut French toast, potato skins and eggs, eggs benny, crispy quesadillas or our All You Can Eat Brunch Taco Bar, including a free Sunday paper and your first beery mary or mimosa. Full menu also available. 112 taps, 300+ microbrews.

WHAT I DID ON MY SUMMER VACATION

It's Enough to Make You Yearn for "Don't Ask, Don't Tell"

Many things have been written about Arizona, some positive and many controversial. Whatever you've heard, I'll tell you, they should think about changing the state motto to: "Arizona: Gayer Than You Think It Is."

For a place with a reputation for conservatism and xenophobia, it's astounding to say that nearly everyone that Sam and I met on our whirlwind tour, from the Mexican border to the Grand Canyon, turned out to be gay.

We spent three days at the incomparable Sunglow Ranch, in the heart of the Chiricahua Mountains (sacred land to the Apaches, where Geronimo and Cochise fought the federales). Most (but not all) of the gays we encountered were imported from Boston to help celebrate Sam's 30th birthday, and whether we were horseback riding with Bucky or at a wine-tasting lunch at the Lawrence Dunham Vineyards, we all had cute outfits.

From there, we drove north to Sedona, home of monumental red rock formations and every kind of New Agey nonconformism known to man. We explored the jaw-dropping scenery in an ATV, and poked around the charming (if slightly touristy) recreation of the Mexican town of Tlaquepaque (which is just plain fun to say; never mind the shopping). L'Auberge de Sedona is now firmly on my list of favorite hotels. Tucked into a shady canyon, it has heart-stopping views of the mountains, and its restaurant—among the most romantic in the world—sits atop the magically beautiful Oak Creek. We also dined at the aptly named Enchantment Resort, where the manager bought us a drink and sought our advice for his upcoming vacation in Provincetown.

Bidding Sedona a reluctant adieu, we headed north through the world's largest ponderosa pine forest for a helicopter ride over the Grand Canyon—an experience so magnificent it moved me to tears, despite the fact that they played the theme to Star Wars over the headphones. (I know. Soooo gay.) Afterward, at the El Tovar Hotel on the southern rim, we were seated next to a pair of attitudinal queens from Colorado, who threw us shade for no good reason.

The emphatically gay innkeeper at the charming Inn at 410 Bed and Breakfast in Flagstaff directed us next door to the farm-to-table Brix Restaurant & Wine Bar, where a discernibly gay waiter was our welcoming committee and tour guide to mischief. Dinner was so superb, we ate there the next night, after which the waiter in question joined us at the Zane Grey Bar at the Weatherford Hotel, where the author lived and where the bar you belly up to was salvaged from Wyatt Earp's saloon in Tombstone.

> Whether we were horseback riding or at a wine-tasting lunch, we all had cute outfits.

We also drove out to see Sunset Crater Volcano and the spectacular 900-year-old ruins at Wupatki, overlooking the Painted Desert. Being proud Bostonians, we were obliged to tour the Lowell Observatory, built by textile magnate Percival Lowell, where the earth-shattering discovery of the expanding universe and the slightly less earth-shattering discovery of Pluto took place. Later we took a fascinating house tour of the Riordan Mansion with a lovely lesbian couple from Long Island.

Our last night in Arizona was spent at the Hotel Valley Ho in Scottsdale, and despite not meeting anyone overtly gay there, its über-hip, mid-century chic is as Chelsea-boy as it gets. Plus, the fact that Natalie Wood and Robert Wagner got married there makes it homosexual hallowed ground.

So the next time somebody criticizes Arizona for being backward, or even cactus-y, tell them it's the gayest place you've ever heard of. I swear to you, even the back cover of the Spring 2012 issue of Grand Canyon magazine has an advertisement for something called "Bearizona." ✖✖✖

Give a Man a Fish

In the years when my income constricted me to a diet of pasta, jealousy and mooched dinner invitations, I drew the line at eating food that was:

A) Processed with machinery also used for manufacturing plutonium rods and/or tomes of necromantic curses.

B) Screaming at me, in English.

C) Hairy.

Adam DeTour

Otherwise, I had the stomach of a jackal. A rare highlight was a visit to East Coast Grill. I remember ordering fish, and the savor of the pearly, seared flesh and life-affirming spices made my thoughts leap into streams of fancy about man and nature, the literature of food, the hunger for life and experience. It also made me resolve to get a fishhook.

The other night, after a 16-odd-year gap between visits, I went back. The ownership was different, but otherwise it felt the same: the mooched invitation, margaritas the color of glow wands, a peppery, expectant air. True, there was grilled watermelon now. But good food doesn't really change. Or does it? To you, I might say, "Be careful of the company you keep." To which you might reply, "You bastard, you stole my wallet!" Everyone's got a different perspective on things, right?

Bulls. Good food is never relative. There are standards and rules, and if you think a Doritos™ Locos Taco belongs in the same culinary genus as the Painted Burro's "cochinita" with spicy citrus achiote, you, sir, ought to be boiled in hydrogenated corn oil. But that's not to say we don't progress. In this issue, we follow the next steps in chef Ming Tsai's career, and we look ahead to the coming trends in dining.

Put It in a Letter

TYPE CAST

CAN A PICTURE OF A FEW words still be worth a thousand? Designer/developer Brendan Ciecko, 24, answers with Fontly, his app designed specifically to curate lettering. "Typography tells a story about people, places and dynamic eras of style and design," says Ciecko. "We can see history in the signs and found-lettering that are woven into the fabric of our cities." Launched in Boston in August, Fontly already has several thousand downloads, with people in more than 50 countries using the app to capture, map and share vintage lettering. "My goal for this project is to emphasize the importance of typography and signage in terms of their visual and anthropological value," says Ciecko. It's a veritable font of knowledge.

Good Eats

Topped Dog

If you're the condiment type, the Sonoran hot dog at Eastie newcomer Que Padre is for you. This regional Mexican specialty—popularized across the border in Arizona—makes the familiar, filling chili dog look scrawny in comparison. Que Padre's kitchen largely specializes in Bolivian food, but here it loads a squishy torpedo roll with a bacon-wrapped and griddled Kayem frank, then piles on pinto beans, chopped onion and tomato, mustard, mayo, ketchup, and, if you can take a little heat, a spoonful of jalapeño salsa. Consider it a faithful old dog's newest trick.

THE A, BB AND CCS OF BEAUTY CREAMS

It was just a few months ago that the multitasking BB cream headlined as the next big thing. But the debut of a new generation of all-in-one products threatens to knock it out of the spotlight. CC cream, BB's superhero cousin, is rumored to cover, protect and perfect any complexion even better. Family feuds aside, see what each product is made of.

TAMARA OMAZIC

Alphabet Soup:
BB: Beauty balm or blemish balm
CC: Color and care, color control or complete correction (folks, we have an identity crisis on our hands)

Origin Story:
BB: 1960s Germany, as a dual treatment/cosmetic to protect skin after laser procedures
CC: Late-2000s Korea, as a cosmetic with added nutrients and improved coverage

The Whole Package:
BB: Primer, foundation, moisturizer, sun protection, anti-aging
CC: All of the above, plus color corrector, brightener (light-reflecting pigments)

Skin Deep:
BB: Lots of hydrators and silicones create a dewy finish
CC: Fewer oils results in a light-matte finish

Label Logic:
BB: Hyaluronic acid and glycerin moisturize, vitamin C has anti-aging benefits (Garnier Skin Renew Miracle Skin Perfector BB Cream)
CC: Glucosamine and niacinimide reduce uneven pigmentation (Olay Total Effects CC Tone Correcting UV Moisturizer)

East Meets West:
BB: Asian versions are targeted color correctors, American counterparts are more like tinted moisturizers
CC: The Asian BB cream

New Release:
BB: Widely available at both drugstores and high-end cosmetic counters
CC: Book a flight to Asia or wait until October when Olay launches its own multitasking concoction

BRANCHING OUT

Fresh beginnings for fall

TWO YEARS AGO, while he was visiting his brother in Rome, chef Michael Pagliarini says he "crossed an emotional threshold" and made a commitment to open his own restaurant. Via Giulia was the location for the epiphany, and so Giulia is the name of the forthcoming restaurant, which will open in late October in Porter Square.

Formerly the executive chef at Via Matta, Pagliarini plans to focus on handmade pasta created daily atop a custom-designed slab that'll double as his chef's table. The 70-seat restaurant and bar will boast an all-Italian wine list.

ANOTHER CHEF PLANNING to strike out on his own is David Punch, chef/co-owner of Ten Tables in Cambridge. Sycamore, set to open by late October in Newton Centre, will feature "rustic European country food," says Punch. "Hyper-seasonal sounds cheesy, but…" (As long as it tastes good, Dave.)

Sycamore's chef de cuisine is Lydia Reichert, most recently at Craigie on Main, and the GM is Zach Lieberman, formerly of Island Creek Oyster Bar. As for the wine list, it'll be "small and concise, with very affordable, bistro-style, incredible value wines," promises Punch. "Newton Centre is ripe for a really nice restaurant." Sycamore also plans to offer something more often found in the city: dinner until 11 pm or even midnight.

BACK IN BOSTON, Liberty Wharf will be the setting for a restaurant sibling to 75 Chestnut on Beacon Hill. Owner Tom Kershaw plans an early October opening for his latest venture, which will offer "reasonably priced, but hearty and good food." Unlike its predecessor, 75 on Liberty Wharf will serve weekday lunch.

PHO-GET ABOUT IT

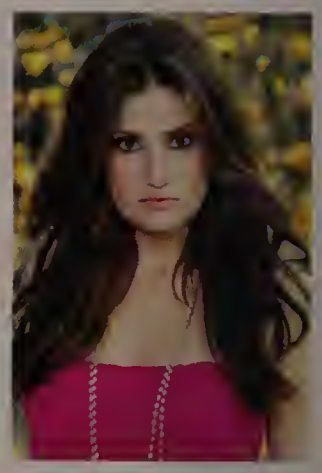
Breakdancing is all about freestyling—intuitively reacting to music to create something interesting. With DooWee & Rice—which opened this month in the old East Asia space in Somerville—chef/owner Duy Tran is following a similar intuition. "My food is going to be pretty daring," says Tran, 24. "I don't really have a set theme or menu." Tran believes this gives him an advantage over other area eateries—for with autonomy comes freedom.

DOOWEE & RICE
868 Broadway, Somerville
(617-764-1906)
dooweeandrice.com

Before training at Le Cordon Bleu in Cambridge and working as a personal chef in Chestnut Hill, Tran had little restaurant experience. But he was always cooking, often with his mom, and while spending nearly a decade traveling as a break-dancer, he created a mental archive of his favorite street food and hole-in-the-wall joints. "We'd find the best foods," he says. "So I figured, why not take that and bring it all together and just have fun with it?" The result is a modest space consisting of an order-at-the-counter setup, with seats for 18.

Though the menu is primarily Vietnamese-inspired, Tran adds a twist to each dish, such as baked kale chips flavored with soy sauce and sesame seeds. The fries are twice cooked and served with sesame-chili aioli, and the burgers—ahem, bao-gers—are served on toasted bao buns and topped with anything from sliced apples and ginger-essence slaw to citrus Hunan marinade and crispy shallots. Tran might bathe fresh mussels in Szechuan butter and Cajun spices, steep them in broth or top them with crispy garlic and fried okra. "I like being in the kitchen," says Tran, "moving around, testing out new things."

One night each week will be devoted to doing just that. Every Wednesday, Tran screens a film (chosen by popular vote), during which he serves potential new items tapas-style alongside a survey that gauges their popularity. Successes will be added to the menu.



But it's the pho that has his patrons—and his mom—most excited. Served solely on select Sundays, Tran uses a family recipe for the Vietnamese noodle soup, starting by braising the beef and brisket with all the bones, cartilage and marrow intact. Then he adds flame-roasted onions and spices before letting the pot simmer overnight. "I'm not being biased," he says. "It's the best." Head to Somerville and find out for yourself.

Q&A

WICKED GOOD

Rent, Wicked and Glee songstress Idina Menzel performs her new album, Live: Barefoot at the Symphony, on Sept. 29 at the Wang Theatre.

Why'd you decide to perform barefoot?
I started playing with orchestras and symphonies all over the country and would dress up and put the gown and the heels on and thought that that's how I had to clean up my act in order to be classy. One day, my back was just killing me because I'd been traveling with my little boy, so the only way I was going to be able to get onstage and do the show was to take off my shoes. And I had the best show I've ever had.

How'd you choose the tracks?
Some songs I choose because they're songs that have meant a lot to me in my life, whether they've affected my career or from shows I've been in that people are excited to hear. Other songs I just wanted to challenge myself with and explore different time periods and different composers. Sometimes, it's just a story I want to tell about something in my life, and a song sort of throws us the perfect anecdote for that.

Do you ever get tired of performing "Defying Gravity" from Wicked?
No, I don't. People ask me that a lot, and it sounds like a stock answer, but the truth is that the song has affected my life in so many ways that when I sing it, it means so many different things at different times. For instance, sometimes it's just a great way to reminisce while I'm singing it, about how thrilling it was to be blown up into the sky onstage and closing the first act, and how that felt for me. Other times, it's about singing it for a little 12-year-old girl in the front row. And other times, it's just about finding a new melody that I'd never thought of before. It's sort of the gift that keeps on giving.

Do you ever get nervous when you perform?
All the time. I learn to live with and try to overcome it, and use my nerves as a way of staying in the moment. I think that you wouldn't be a good performer if you didn't get that sense because things would just get stale. If you're going to give people goose bumps, you have to get that part of you alive, too.

Drink of the Moment

OLIVE THE ABOVE

NAME: The Oak Martini Service

PRICE: $18

INGREDIENTS: Ridiculously simple. Ice, garnish and booze, served in a bucket.

SIZE MATTERS: The Oak's martini is a six-ounce pour, instead of your standard four.

LIQUOR: The bar suggests Belvedere Unfiltered Vodka, made from Polish rye. "There's more body to it," suggests general manager Michael Letterman. Indeed, it tastes nuttier and thicker than filtered vodkas and robust enough to sip unmixed.

ALTERNATIVES: "We're using as many local spirits and fresh ingredients as we can," says Letterman, citing Massachusetts labels like Bully Boy and Berkshire Mountain Distillers. The bar's draught list, too, is entirely regional with the exception of Miller Lite (for traveling businessmen).

GARNISHES: The most popular are the Roquefort-stuffed jumbo green olives. But black olives stuffed with house-made boursin do the trick, too.

PRESENTATION: When the Oak Room reopened as Oak Long Bar + Kitchen this past summer, the facelift extended to more than the new entrance, sprawling copper bar, open sightlines and hearth oven. They updated the martini buckets. "They're Nambé wine chillers," says Letterman. "High-quality alloys. Very modern and cool, and look like chrome." Otherwise, the venue's service remains the same as it did when Cary Grant was still leaning a tuxedo sleeve against a bartop.

CHARACTER: Atavistic, luxurious. Craft cocktailers will find little novelty in vodka and vermouth, and there's a blunt message in ordering a personal carafe of 80 proof liquor. This is the idealized, classic cocktail, as fresh as it was 50 years ago.

PAIR IT WITH: Something equally strong. For instance, a custom charcuterie board, alongside prosciutto, and herb and smoked cheddar biscuits served with red onion aioli.

TIPS ON DIP

Chips and salsa: the greatest thing since sliced tortillas. They're a Mexican restaurant's more flavorful version of bread and butter, with the extra bonus of being fried. All told, salsa really is the best way to eat your vegetables. When you're craving a little taste of the South in the North, there are some safe havens of spice and salt you can turn to. These are a few places we've been chipping away at.

BORDER CAFÉ ★★★

Bonus points for being served warm, but could be cut thicker.

Too liquid, but is overall well-balanced and tastes homemade.

THE CACTUS CLUB ★

Your napkin might become see-through from all of the grease.

Smoky, but otherwise bland with little zip.

ROSA MEXICANO ★★

Bring some Chapstick because your lips will dry out from all the loose salt.

They only offer tomatillo, which was spicy with a citrusy zest and overloaded with black pepper.

SOLAZTECA ★★★★

Tasted freshly made with just the right amount of salt.

With roasted pepper, cilantro and chunks of onion, it's spicy, but not enough to make you chug your margarita.

ZÓCALO COCINA MEXICANA ★★½

Thick, crisp and not oversalted.

Sweet and fruity, but the heat could use some cojones.

Making the Rounds

If you time it right, you can get your lamejun fresh from the oven. Try around 10 am, after the Dervartanian family has ground the lamb and beef, chopped the onions and herbs, rolled out the dough and spread the tomato-meat sauce. As you arrive, the super-thin Armenian pizzas should be browning in the oven, their edges beginning to furl. The namesake dish is what this 70-year-old Belmont bakery and grocer does best—especially when it's spread with their house-made eggplant dip and tangy tzatziki. ELIZABETH BOMZE

SWEPT AWAY

Don't let the lack of flying broomsticks fool you—real-world Quidditch isn't just a silly Muggle game. With more than 700 teams worldwide, it was an exhibition sport at this year's Olympics. And Team USA—which includes three players from the Boston area—took home the gold.

"You have the Harry Potter–obsessed, who join simply because it's originated from the series, and you have the truly competitive—people who join for the action and [who] might not have even read a single book," says former Boston University Quidditch team captain Kedzie Teller, 22, who played chaser for the national team.

For those unfamiliar with the wizarding world in J.K. Rowling's books, Quidditch is a semi-contact sport in which teams score by passing one ball through a hoop while alternately dodging a bewitched second one and searching for a tiny third—all while airborne.

In the real world, the game is a blend of rugby and dodgeball, and while there's no flying, the action is fast paced. "My heart is always racing," says Allison Gillette, 22, an Emerson College alum who played beater for Team USA.

Chaser and team captain Zach D'Amico, 21, agrees. "When we have brooms down, eyes closed, before the start of the game, [that's] definitely the most nerve-wracking moment in the sport," he says. "It gives you about 30 seconds alone with your thoughts. It's amazing how as soon as the ref says, 'Brooms up,' all those nerves go out the window, and nothing matters but the game." JENNIFER JACKSON

Impersonals PARTY LINES

TO THE "VEXED FEMINIST LATINA AND REPUBLICAN READER": I also lived through the '80s, and while I appreciate that your life under the Reagan administration was lucrative, mine wasn't. The fact that you directly state that success during that time was based upon hard work is insulting to those of us who had to suffer through it. My father was a mechanic, at that time a lifelong Republican, and the hardest-working person I've ever met. When Reaganomics trickled down on us, his pay was cut and he lost his insurance on which our entire family depended. My father found a better job a few years later, but he was no longer a Republican. While Reagan may have meant well, his policies didn't help the small businessmen or the blue-collar people I knew, nor will repeating those policies help me. As for Reagan's vacations, according to his Presidential Library, he had taken 112 days at his ranch by his third year in office. George W. Bush had taken 182 days (and a whopping 1,020 for both terms). Obama has taken only 78. Instead of throwing around uninformed insinuations, maybe you should practice the "pedantics" you disdain and "occupy a library to learn something" yourself.

A low-income, hard-working Democrat

To Michael:

I'm a mechanic, and on Aug. 6, I got my hand caught in a motor fan while on the job in Kenmore Square. Despite all the blood, Michael ran up to me, tied a tourniquet on my arm, wrapped a towel around my hand and put pressure to slow down the bleeding. I didn't have the presence of mind to ask his last name. If you're Michael or know Michael, please contact the magazine so I can say "thanks." If you don't want to contact me, just know that I appreciate the help in a big way. Marcello

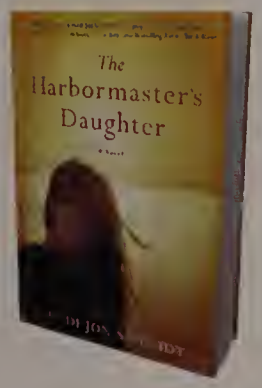
SINS OF THE PARENTS



A Cape Cod novel about love, motherhood and murder

A CHILD BORN OF PARENTS from radically different cultures and classes shoulders the burdens of complexity. In this novel, the father, Franco, is a married Cape Cod "Portagee" fisherman. The mother, Sabine, is of the privileged, arty world, a romantically reckless "washashore."

When Sabine is murdered, her decent, single friend LaRee adopts baby Vita. Franco, bolstered by a forgiving wife and naïve narcissism, maintains uneasy contact with his self-doubting daughter.

Skeins of questions wrap around the story: Who killed Sabine? Considering the influence of her ghostly, guilty mother, who will Vita become? How will LaRee navigate adoptive parenthood? And indeed, how does Vita accede to the Portuguese half of her identity, whose salty, earthy ethos appears attractive, given her middle-class life with LaRee?

The Harbormaster's Daughter
by Heidi Jon Schmidt

Schmidt's novel is set in Cape Cod.

Vita battles with a schoolmate whose father, eerily, emerges as the killer, and as a result, the tragedy tumbles down a generation to these innocent daughters.

LaRee shields Vita, enduring her teenage rebellion. When Vita learns more of what's been concealed, she joins a Shakespearean theater full of rambunctious gay men (there's great dialogue here) who stretch her identity in a whole new direction. Franco, fittingly, plays a bit part. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 42: "Falling for him was like falling in love with the whole town: the stinging wind off the water; the crabs popping in and out of their holes alongside the marsh; the layers of history back and back and back, through the mackerel fishery, the New York intellectuals and plein air painters, the whaling captains with their clipper ships. It was real—feet-planted-in-the-tide-bottom real. And nothing else was ever real anymore.

Now the television had their photos side by side, Franco in his peacoat and fisherman's cap, Sabine with a paintbrush in hand..."

THE ARTFUL LODGER

Discovering Providence's unexpected side

QUIRKING AROUND It's not all universities and art museums in Rhode Island's capital.

TO BOSTONIANS, Providence's only lures may seem to be Brown, the Dunkin' Donuts Center and the occasional colonial building. The city, however, is a surprise. A hybrid of Parisian beauty and Austin creativity, even the commuter rail station feels novel. Shallow fountains populate parks, and wide low-hanging bridges over the Woonasquatucket River resemble a scene from the banks of the Seine. The State House looks like a larger-scale Les Invalides, while the baroque-style City Hall comes complete with a traditional French mansard roof. But suddenly, you realize that the storefront you just passed is filled with life-size, one-eyed monsters constructed from foam, that half of the people on the block have multicolored hair, and there's a free belly-dancing performance on the next corner. Home to the Rhode Island School of Design, quirky, unexpected touches permeate this city. Luckily, in a place founded on freedom, you'll never have to choose between the two personalities.

For the most convenient experience, keep your itinerary concentrated to downtown, or downcity. The Hotel Providence is located a few blocks away from lots of shops and restaurants, and the interior looks like a modern interpretation of a hotel from the late 1800s, with Corinthian marble columns and a Nutcracker-style grandfather clock adorning the lobby. The rooms themselves are opulent, with red plush chairs complemented by rich olive-green accents, turning a bedroom into a boudoir.

Head over to Westminster, a tree-lined street with dangling Christmas lights, known as the boutique haven of downcity. Try the Queen of Hearts and its sister store, Modern Love, for colorful, vintage-inspired women's apparel and accessories, with sales to satisfy a starving artist's budget. Pick up a novel at Symposium Books and order a chai tea at the Small Point Café, a coffeehouse with exposed brick and big leather couches. On the corner of Westminster is a local sweet spot, Craftland, that houses one-of-a-kind gifts such as a paper-monster kit ($11) or catnip French fries ($9), complete with a McDonalds-style fry bag. If you want to claim that you went to art school in Rhode Island, Craftland also offers classes like skateboard stenciling and postcard knitting. (It's a lot cheaper than paying tuition.)

✓ Traveler's Checks

For a quick breakfast before your ride home, check out Temple Downtown, where you can sit outside next to the State House.

Hotel Providence is dog-friendly and even offers a "yappy" hour for pets and their owners.

On nondescript Eddy Street, you'll pass a building that looks like a Hollywood storage space for an alien invasion movie. Inside is Big Nazo, a workshop that specializes in life-size puppets used for performance art. The puppets—which include aliens, monsters, beasts and Romney and Obama—are a combination of a sweeter Dr. Frankenstein and a more absurd Jim Henson. Visitors are welcome to try the puppets on, or to befriend the resident cat, Solo, who takes afternoon naps on the monsters' heads.

Your culinary palate can be gratified at Hotel Providence's Aspire, where chef Gregory P. Krol's dishes are works of art in their own right. The menu changes about every three months, but Krol's airy duck spring rolls have stayed consistent throughout the last four iterations. Equally succulent is the steak frites, a hefty portion of thick-cut fries and a marinated skirt steak with a drizzle of the restaurant's tangy house-made sauce. The raspberry cheesecake with a honey granola crumble is half-cheesecake, half-molten-lava cake, oozing raspberry puree from the center. After licking the plate clean, head to the outdoor courtyard, where you can listen to free jazz on Friday nights.

Like a choose-your-own-adventure novel, Providence nightlife caters to every possible demographic. Artists find their niche at the Salon, a club-like space strewn with bare wooden picnic tables and pinball machines, and there's a late-night snack menu consisting of PB&J, Fluffernutter and s'mores sandwiches. Hipsters will appreciate orders of Pickle Backs—shots of Jameson chased with pickle juice. Yuppies should visit the upscale, low-key Red Fez. A haven for locals, the bar's only sign is a picture of a red fez against a black wood backing, making it tough to spot at night, but well worth the trouble.

While Providence's colleges and universities may define the city, don't ignore its decadent desserts, architectural flair and Cyclops puppets. Simply put, the place has a certain je ne sais quoi. ✖✖✖

TIP OF THE CAPS Enjoy seasonal mushroom risotto in the last of the summer weather.

THIS PLACE IS TERRIFIC. I'm relieved, as I was a fan of the previous tenant, Frank McClelland's original Sel de la Terre. Opened 12 years ago, that restaurant experienced an early rough patch, finding itself cheek by jowl with the construction megaproject known as the Big Dig. Eventually the plywood and roadblocks came down, and the Rose Kennedy Greenway blossomed into an urban oasis of art and markets, strollers and sunbathers. This spring, chef Bill Brodsky, formerly of Wequasset Resort in Harwich, and his team purchased McClelland's space, opening its doors in July. With a new energy and sunny atmosphere, punctuated by the views from floor-to-ceiling windows, City Landing takes full advantage of this renewed environment.

City Landing's splendid site is complemented by its service, as the hospitality of the front-of-house staff makes dining here a treat. On a visit late one Saturday afternoon, the captain noticed I was dining alone and asked if I'd like some reading material. My waiter offered purified still or bubbly, both complimentary, a welcome gesture in comparison to the usual heavy-handed push of pricey bottled water. These small touches set a tone in which a diner feels more like a guest than a customer.

Delicious honey wheat bread arrived with Vermont butter crusted with sea salt, but a supplemental order of a trio spreads ($12) is worth consideration. With robust, yet mellow, goat cheese, white bean puree packed with roasted garlic and an artichoke tapenade bursting with flavor, the selection hit several high notes. Fried calamari ($12), so good I ordered it on two different visits, featured a superlative texture with a crispy crust moistened with a tasty, sweet-hot chili drizzle. A standout Caesar salad ($9), with flavorful white anchovies that shouldn't be left "on the side," made for a satisfying feast, despite being priced as a half portion.

Two appetizers that rivaled the calamari were the Bostonian shrimp 'n' grits ($13) and the seasonal mushroom risotto ($11). The first brought an exquisite combination of juicy rock shrimp, silky and tender as soft shell lobster, with creamy, buttery polenta—a remarkable recipe. The portion size may give trenchermen pause, but the dish was so rich and filling that more would've been less. As for the risotto, it combined aromatic truffle oil, seasonal mushrooms, al dente rice and Parmesan-Reggiano for a hardy and comforting dish with a velvety mouth feel.

Among the entrees, five hefty sea scallops ($32), delicate and satiny beneath their caramelized surfaces, could've stood on their own, but arrived with a mushroom ravioli and delectable tarragon cream sauce that blew me away. Pan-roasted flounder ($27) brought a generous hunk of moist snow-white fish, its firm texture complemented by a garnish of asparagus and artichoke crisps in a mustard-butter sauce. Hoisin-barbecued tuna ($30) with a dashi-soy broth and a marvelous baby bok choy accompaniment added a welcome touch of Asian flavors.

The New York strip sirloin ($38) could compete with any steakhouse's, its robust taste enhanced by garlic and shallots fried in mosto oil from northern Italy. Finally—and about time, given the long ago loss of Lydia Shire's awfully good offal at Biba—liver and onions ($28) made an appearance. The two plump and tender lobes of calves' liver came paired with buttery, ambrosial braised leeks. Already memorable, the plate could, and should, have stopped there, but the addition of bacon and a dense porcini-potato pierogi weighed down an already heavy entree.

City Landing's prices aren't low, but its food and service deliver real value. Unfortunately, the same can't be said of the wine list, which offers no bottle of red for under $40. Should you be in the mood for bubbly, consider sticking with the free sparkling water. There are plenty of beers on tap, and despite the pricing hiccup, the restaurant remains a class act. As the area settles into its post-Dig present, City Landing should provide quality dining for the foreseeable future. ✖✖✖

Q: IS THERE ANYTHING SPECIAL I SHOULD DO FOR MY SKIN AS SUMMER WINDS DOWN?

WINNER BOSTON'S BEST 2012 The Improper Bostonian

A: At this time of year it is a good idea to rejuvenate and freshen our skin with topical Vitamin C to help balance out the sun exposure we received over the summer. Sun exposure causes free radical damage, which leads to brown age spots, wrinkles, and sagging skin. Vitamin C is a powerful anti-oxidant. Vitamin C, in the form of L-ascorbic acid, will neutralize the free radicals that would otherwise break down your skin cells and cause noticeable aging.

Choose SkinHealth's Vital C 15% for an effective topical vitamin C that is one of the essential keys to vibrant, younger looking skin. Apply to face, neck and decollete every morning prior to moisturizer and sunscreen.

To jump-start the rejuvenation process, you may also make an appointment for a SkinHealth Vital C anti-oxidant facial. We will have your skin healthy and glowing in no time!

Movies { SEAN BURNS }

GERE UP

Even with a top performance from its lead, this movie's stock still plummets.

Arbitrage ★★☆☆
Starring Richard Gere, Susan Sarandon, Brit Marling, Laetitia Casta and Nate Parker. Written and directed by Nicholas Jarecki. At Kendall Square and available via Video On Demand.

WE HATE THESE GUYS, but hedge fund manager Robert Miller has it all. Pushing 60, and played by Richard Gere with his trademark smooth intonations, he's a walking embodiment of the 1 percent. Slick, cocky and fundamentally vapid, he's aiming to cash in, sell out and retire in style. Miller is even lucky enough to have a wife (Susan Sarandon) who looks the other way when he dallies around with an art dealer (Laetitia Casta).

With the possible exception of Michael Douglas, is there anybody better at playing wealthy scumbags than Richard Gere? The star's '80s swagger has receded into a fascinating, recessive, silver-maned emptiness. Gere has gotten a second wind in his career by playing morally bankrupt characters, and he glides through Nicholas Jarecki's otherwise unexceptional Arbitrage with grace under pressure.

There's a matter of a missing $400 million dollars, which Miller hides from his accountant daughter (a robotic Brit Marling) while in the midst of negotiating a massive merger. The high-stakes, financial flimflams would be enough to sustain a more interesting movie, but unfortunately writer/director Jarecki has a weakness for 1940s melodrama, and Arbitrage's Wall Street shenanigans take a backseat to silly developments.

The moldy plot developments collide with a more cheerfully corrupt 21st-century thriller.

Miller flips his car one night, killing his mistress. Nearly caught with his hand in the cookie jar, he aims to cover up the accident while faltering from a wound to the sternum. He then enlists everybody he knows in a dopey plan that could've been resolved with a simple phone call to his lawyer and one bad night with his wife. It's never really clear why Gere's Master of the Universe should be so panicked about getting busted for cheating—it's certainly not the worst of his sins. But the case attracts the attention of a hambone detective played by Tim Roth.

Can we speak for a moment about Roth? Just because he's British and has been in some great movies, his egregious overacting gets overlooked. When has Roth ever met any scenery that he hasn't eaten outright? As a hard-boiled Noo Yawk police officer, Roth makes a meal out of his vowels, thrusting out his neck muscles and carrying on like he's in a much bigger, more theatrical film than the one we're watching.

His showiness is a bad match for Gere, who tends to enter his scenes under the radar and keep Miller's increasing desperation at arm's length. Gere is one of the more gifted underactor's working today, sliding into movies with a relaxed narcissism that wears well in a tuxedo. While he's working his crooked bank deal and flailing to bury the embarrassing car crash, you can't escape the notion that Miller has done much worse in the past.

Mismatched pieces are Arbitrage's major problem. Jarecki tries to vamp up the vintage plot turns with something close to outrage, as if he's shocked that there'd be anything untoward going on in the modern stock market. There's a retro-kitsch factor here, including a couple of boldly drawn baddies, but the moldy plot developments collide with a more cheerfully corrupt 21st-century thriller.

I was reminded of David Cronenberg's Cosmopolis, a delectably ghastly two-hour limo ride inside the id of a disconnected billionaire. It recently came and went from area theaters without much fuss. Based on the novel by Don DeLillo, Cosmopolis was a stark, terrifying continuation of The Social Network and spoke openly to the soulless rot in the heart of hyper-capitalist businessmen-pirates.

Arbitrage, on the other hand, is content to play things by the book. Aside from Gere, there's really not much to see here. Jarecki comes from a family of documentarians and makes an unaccomplished feature debut—shooting his scenes competently, if not particularly interestingly. There's also a minor subplot involving a scapegoat chauffeur (Nate Parker) that contains a tinge of pandering racism, playing idealized African-American poverty against our smooth operator.

This would've been a better movie without the gimcrack, B-picture trappings. Isn't it compelling enough to watch Gere engineer a high-stakes fraud without a dated melodrama hogging all the foreground? ✖✖✖

A CELEBRATION OF BELGIAN BEER

Best of Belgium

Belgium is renowned for its vibrant and diverse beer culture. A rich tradition of culinary invention and improvisation, combined with centuries of brewing passion and expertise, helped craft a stunning variety of beer styles enjoyed around the world.

Leffe Blonde was first brewed in 1240 by the monks of Abbaye de Notre Dame de Leffe in Belgium. A spicy, faintly clove-like aroma is balanced by Leffe's creamy body and restrained dry finish.

Stella Artois' rich brewing heritage dates back to 1366 in Leuven, Belgium, where it was first brewed to celebrate the holiday season. Traditional malted barley and the highest quality European hops give Stella Artois its full flavor and delicately crisp finish.

Hoegaarden is the Original Belgian Wheat Beer, dating back to the 15th Century. A naturally cloudy beer, Hoegaarden features a secret to its refreshing flavor and spicy nose: real Curaçao orange peel and a dash of coriander.

Always Enjoy Responsibly.

TO THE HEART

George Lewis Jr. casts emotional immediacy in Twin Shadow

Twin Shadow
plays the Paradise Rock Club on Sept. 30.

PUNK BEGAT NEW WAVE. And for George Lewis Jr., the path to his crooner-meets-synth-pop outfit, Twin Shadow, wound through his time with the Boston soul-punk band Mad Man Films.

"I always thought we were the odd band out," Lewis, 28, recalls of Mad Man Films, which called it quits several years ago. "We weren't necessarily doing what people would traditionally call punk, so it wasn't really a big deal to change into anything else."

Raised in Florida, the Dominican singer/guitarist has thrived by changing landscapes, musical and otherwise. By the time he arrived in Boston at age 18 ("I came pretending to go to school to appease my parents, but that's not what I wanted to do,"), he'd devoured influences from Tupac Shakur to the Clash. He absorbed Bob Dylan, Peter Gabriel, Prince and Nina Simone, moved to Brooklyn and spent time abroad in Berlin, further broadening his outlook.

"I call it my mutt taste," Lewis says. "I really have a passion for all those different types of music equally—and always have. We're living in a time, finally, where genre doesn't matter anymore."

> "I've found that synthesizers aided me in being able to get my feelings across."

Nonetheless, given Lewis' earlier dalliance with angst, Twin Shadow is a leap, which uses an electro-pop sound that nods to the '80s with richly textured minimalism, leaving his vocals exposed.

"That was a big step for me, getting more comfortable, wearing my heart on my sleeve and making truly emotional music," Lewis says. "I've found that synthesizers get a more lush musical vocabulary and aided me in being able to get my feelings across."

He found a catalyst in reflecting on past relationships, mainly on a long-term romantic affair that had recently ended, and he poured those feelings into his 2010 debut Forget, which Grizzly Bear's Chris Taylor produced and released on his Terrible Records label. "I'll always consider Forget probably my most important record because it's the thing that helped me find myself musically," Lewis says.

The Twin Shadow frontman took full control of his follow-up album, Confess, which was released earlier this year. Working with keyboardist Wynne Bennett from his touring band, Lewis produced an album with bolder, sweeping pop strokes. Opener "Golden Light" swings with a percolating gospel sheen while Lewis swoons as he sings, "If I chase after you, doesn't mean that it's true," his vocals reminiscent of TV on the Radio's frontman, Tunde Adebimpe. Lewis brings darker tension to "Patient," where he declares, "I am patiently waiting for you to give up everything and say just what you mean," while the slower beat gives way to drumline-inspired percussion breaks and a skittering guitar lead.

"It's a tougher record," says Lewis, who made Confess in a Los Angeles home studio. "It's just the immediate emotion, not the thing you figure out, not the things you learn after the fact."

The impetus for his temporary West Coast move was to record in an environment where he could enjoy his new motorcycle (a 1972 Triumph Bonneville), since he'd been too busy touring the past two years. Lewis can be seen riding it in the video for "Five Seconds," the lead single off his new album. The track's brisk drum-machine pulse and his "I can't get to your heart" lyric fuel the urgency in the clip's violent showdown with masked thugs, a glimpse of the story line from Night of the Silver Sun, a futuristic novel that he recently coauthored.

Lewis says his California motorcycle trips helped clear his head to visualize the direction for Confess—and to get over an accident in Allston in which he fell off his bike.

"It's definitely an escape," explains Lewis, noting that his bike is more fun than his tour bus, which is currently rolling across the States with a final stop at the Paradise on Sept. 30. "It's just the fact that it's relaxing," he says. "Some people play badminton." ✖✖✖

AMERICAN DREAMS

Different views on a big idea

I WALK THE CITY A LOT. Having life moving around us, and sometimes being a part of it, contributes to one's well-being. On a jaunt recently, on the flat of Beacon Hill, I walked by a construction pit in the ground, a hole waiting for something to be built. The pit has been there for years. Leaning against a cinderblock wall in the pit is a large poster board showing an architectural rendering of someone's dream house. This has been on display for as long as I can remember. To the right of this poster board someone spray-painted a smiling cartoon face and the phrase, "The American Dream." Every time I walk by this scene I feel both hopeful, and very sad.

We are a nation of immigrants. That's what makes us unique. It gives us our strength and resiliency. In my office, I have a picture of my maternal grandfather dressed in a baseball uniform, a catcher behind a chest protector and small padded mask. The picture was taken on Boston Common in 1907. His dream, as an immigrant from Eastern Europe, was to become American as quickly as possible. My dad believed that the dream was home ownership. He'd mow the lawn, pull the weeds and plant a small vegetable garden, lost in working the tiny plot of land, happy in the summer sunshine. I'd see him there when I came home from the playground, and he'd call me over, sweep his arms toward his garden, yard and our house. "This is what the struggle is all about," he'd say, and for him it was true. Not family, but land. Ownership.

I heard a statistic a while ago claiming that 50 percent of the people who reside in Boston today didn't live here 10 years ago. So I thought I'd take a sampling of this new population and ask them about the concept of the "American dream." My friend Abdi has parked cars for years at restaurants around the city. Abdi works several jobs at once, has two small children and saves money. "The dream," he said, "is for my children, for their education, for them to feel safe." Most people I've known in my life never dwell on the concept of "safe." They assume safe.

I recently met a young woman named Hannah who works in financial services. She pours herself passionately into her job. Not surfing the net, not talking on the phone with friends, not texting or buying sweaters on J. Crew. You'd be instantly taken with Hannah. You'd like to hire her yourself. Hannah grew up in Ethiopia. She had AK-47s held to her head and those of her siblings when intruders burst into her home before dawn. "For me," she said, "the American dream is freedom of religion and freedom of speech. Everyone I see around me should be grateful every day. They have no idea what evil is alive in the world."

On the subject of hopes and dreams, I thought I'd get opinions from three generations of one family, going back to the 1920s. They've been involved in Broadway, silent movies, classical music on international stages, Polish war efforts, TV and modern movies, corporate law and big business—a panorama of the 20th century into the 21st. Tony, a corporate lawyer, said, "My dad was in the OSS during World War II. He parachuted behind enemy lines in Sicily right before we invaded and was killed when I was three. My mother had been an actress in silent films and stage. Then she switched gears and threw herself into helping others, becoming the first head of UNICEF after the end of the war. To her, I'd think that the American dream was to export to the children of the world what we have here."

"I'm more concerned about the American Nightmare."

"And for you?" I asked.

"I'm an amatuer student of history," he said, "and I've never seen such polarization in American society. I'm fearful for all of us, and not so concerned about the American Dream as I am about the American Nightmare."

Tony's daughter is a noted actress, funny and smart like her grandmother, and also on the board of UNICEF. "My grandmother ate life," she told me. "But my idea of the American dream is to be part of something bigger than I've ever been part of before. To stretch myself to look in the mirror and say I'm better, stronger."

I wandered into a nail salon in a busy part of the city. But it was a quiet summer afternoon with people on vacation, so the owner, Kim, sat and talked with me. She came from Cambodia after the Vietnam War ended, but chaos reigned in that part of the world.

"We had relatives in Boston. We had nothing, nothing. The dress on my body and a hairbrush. I went to work in a salon. Spent nothing, saved everything." She smiled at me, but it was a bitter smile. "Now I have four salons. Forty workers. Most of them Cambodian, and three Vietnamese. I believe in diversity." She laughed a real laugh.

"What's the American dream for you?" I asked.

"Easy," she answered. "It's getting rich. Money."

I heard Colin Powell give a college commencement speech once. He ended it by saying, "Is this a great country, or what?"

Amen. ×××

PLAYING IT SAFE

In defense of cowardice

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

MY JOB CONSISTENTLY leads me toward activities that I wouldn't ordinarily undertake. Getting kicked in the throat by a black belt, dancing onstage with the Flaming Lips, invading my wife's workplace and sexually harassing her while hidden inside a giant bean costume—these are endeavors that I can rationalize with the ol', "Well, that'll be something to write about." Without the pressure to produce this column, there's very little chance that I would've ever been the lone guy hanging out at a sex-toy sales party. I'm not saying there's no chance. But probably very little, unless the hors d'oeuvres were really good.

However, despite my healthy appetite for uncomfortable situations, there are a great many stories that you'll never get to read simply because I'm too much of a 'fraidy cat to attempt the experience in the first place. For instance, you won't read my account of the Sturgis motorcycle rally because immediately upon receipt of the invitation, I began imagining all the horrible things that would happen to me there. If I didn't skid off a cliff somewhere along the way, then I'd probably be conscripted into a biker gang and forced to become a nomadic outlaw living on the fringes of society with nothing to my name but my bike and my reputation. Honestly, like I have time for that?

Not long after I nixed the Sturgis idea, I got an invite to go skydiving with elite military paratroopers. I initially agreed, but as the deadline drew near, I remembered a whole litany of important tasks that demanded attention. Cataloging my collection of can cozies. Preventative food-processor maintenance. My taxes. For 2013.

I mean, as great as it sounds to tumble out of an airplane with a dude strapped to your back, my mind kept returning to a disturbing term I'd heard a few weeks before. A friend who's apparently tight with paratroopers received a massive speeding ticket after he came zipping around a corner just as cops were attending to the scene of a skydiving accident. "This guy dirt-darted," he said. "So then all these cops were there…" I interrupted his story to ask if "dirt-dart" meant what I thought it meant. "Yeah," he replied. "The guy's chute didn't open."

Here's my logic: If a parachute failing to open is a common enough occurrence that there's a jocular term for it, then I'm fine with never, ever leaping from an airplane. That's despite the fact that at my in-laws' house, there's a proudly displayed photo of my wife skydiving. Maybe she's braver than I am, but I'll bet she's never heard of dirt-darts.

Hitchhiking is another topic with which I wrestle. I'm sure that if I picked up a hitchhiker I'd have a great story, presuming I didn't end up dismembered in a reservoir. Every time I see a hitchhiker, I feel the urge to stop. But I never do, which is hypocritical since I was on the pedestrian side of that equation one night not too long ago.

My friend Dave and I had walked two miles to the Beachcomber in Wellfleet. As it was raining, we made this trek beneath a patio umbrella. That's fine when you're running on beer-fueled enthusiasm, but the prospect of the walk home at 1 am was much less palatable, and taxis were nowhere to be seen. So Dave set up a roadblock.

Literally, he found sawhorses in the woods and began placing them across the top of the access road. I stood nearby opining that this strategy would never work because people don't pick up hitchhikers anymore, and they especially don't pick up two hitchhikers who are carrying a patio umbrella on a dark country road in the middle of the night. And yet, once Dave completely blocked off the road, a car was forced to stop. A girl stepped out to see what was going on, and Dave chivalrously declared, "Here, let me get that out of your way," moving the obstacle that he himself had placed there 30 seconds earlier. He then petitioned her to give us a lift, and—much to my amazement—she agreed. Two guys and a giant umbrella thus piled into a Pontiac Sunbird with a girl named Mary. When we got home, Dave handed her the money we would've spent on cab fare and bid Mary farewell, saying, "Thanks for the ride. Now don't ever do that again."

See, you don't about hear the happy outcomes like that on the nightly news. So, now that I've walked two miles in a hitcher's shoes, what did I do the night that I was driving through Hingham and saw a guy plodding along with his thumb out? That's right. I kept driving. I've got to play it safe. Someday I might want to see Sturgis. ✖✖✖

3 Bits of Campus Chaos

BU, Who Knew? The only thing more shocking than the results of the recent investigation into BU hockey is that people are shocked that this kind of ridiculous culture exists within BU hockey—or any major college sports institution, for that matter. Come on, didn't you guys see The Program?

Down Goes Harvard It's a shame that Harvard's men's basketball resurgence has been derailed by the recent cheating scandal. However, it's not so surprising when you remember that said resurgence was a product of the Crimson getting a little, how you say, creative with their academic standards. Oops.

ACC's the Place to Be Congratulations to the ACC for bringing Notre Dame into the conference for every sport except football (and hockey). That's about as cool as buying a new car that comes equipped with everything but a steering wheel.

ONE EYE ON 2013

MLB released next year's schedule, and there's one series that especially stands out: Aug. 23–25, Red Sox vs. Adrian Gonzalez, Josh Beckett and the Dodgers! Oh, mama. (Carl Crawford will be there, but on the bench recovering from a sprained ankle suffered in his first game back from Tommy John surgery.)

2 SHINING SOX LIGHTS

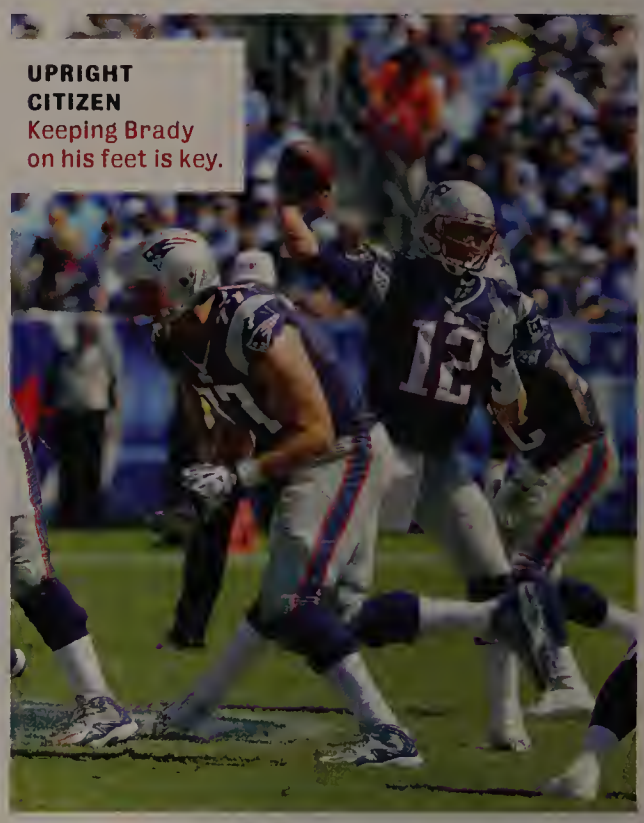
DUSTIN PEDROIA
The little guy received a ton of criticism this season, and most of it was deserved. But over the last two months, the Muddy Chicken has turned the page on all the drama. At press, he's hitting .358 since August and finally showing people "how we do things around here," instead of just saying it.

CLAY BUCHHOLZ
These days, his early-season struggles feel as distant as the memory of Pedroia's hairline, and Clay looks poised to kick off next season as one of the AL's most dominant pitchers. As long as he can finally find a way to keep down that weight.

4 DATES TO WATCH

9/23: The Patriots walk into Baltimore for a Sunday night game with the Ravens. But thanks to Bernard Pollard, you know at least one Patriot isn't walking out.

9/26: The Sox tango with Tampa for the last time this season, but the real competition is "Who'll get to the park first: Bobby V or Joe Maddon?"



9/28: The 39th Ryder Cup kicks off in Medinah, Ill., which inspired Tyler Perry's new film, Medinah Hosts a Golf Tournament.

9/30: The Pats head up to Buffalo to take on the Bills... which is pretty much the only reason anyone would head up to Buffalo.

5 FALL FORECASTS

Hockey Night in Nowhere Last summer, it was the NFL. Last fall, it was the NBA. This time, it's the NHL heading toward a work stoppage, and tensions between the two sides are as cold as the ice on which they skate. Are these guys actually dumb enough to lose another season? You wouldn't think so, but just to be safe, we might want to place Jack Edwards under 24-hour supervision.

Keeping Brady on his feet is key.

Bye-Bye Bobby V? Ownership's refusal to commit to Bobby Valentine doesn't bode well for his return. Neither does the fact that bringing him back as a lame-duck manager would be the organization's worst idea since Sox Appeal. The only question: Is there a viable replacement? Unless they can pry John Farrell from Toronto or Mike Scioscia gets fired in L.A., I'm not sure. (It's times like this when I really miss Johnny Pesky.)

Walt for Wes There was a monumental freakout around these parts after Wes Welker was targeted only five times (and sat out 16 snaps) in the Pats' Week 1 win. But don't cut him from your fantasy team quite yet. Seriously, if Bill Belichick really planned to phase out Welker, why franchise him in the first place? I'm sure the coach could've found better ways to spend $9.5 million. For instance, ordering the kidnapping of the entire Boston media contingent.

All-Around Rondo We'll never see another offseason like the Shirtless Summer of Gronk, but Rajon Rondo's had a stellar few months in his own right. He was in the Philippines, he interned at GQ and he hosted a basketball tournament on Alcatraz. He was on Jimmy Kimmel Live, B.E.T. and spent an afternoon at ESPN. No other way to put it: He burst out of his shell. No doubt that'll change his performance on the court. Gather 'round children, it's time for the Next Level.

Jumping for Jones As the years go by, keeping Tom Brady upright and healthy is Belichick's utmost priority. One way to do that? Always make sure the offensive line is primed and ready. Another way? Draft Chandler Jones! Seriously. Having Jones on New England's side might extend Brady's career by five years. The rest of the league's QBs must be shaking in their spandex. (Or in Mark Sanchez's case, pantyhose.)

"I like to get close and cuddle with my food."

Soroff On GAIL SIMMONS

The Top Chef judge spills the beans on bakers' personalities, cookbooks and Tom Colicchio's head.

SINCE 2006, GAIL SIMMONS HAS BEEN A JUDGE ON THE NUMBER-one rated, Emmy award–winning Bravo show Top Chef. A Toronto native, in 1999 Simmons moved to New York, where she attended culinary school, trained with such chefs as Jean-Georges Vongerichten and Daniel Boulud, and worked for Vogue food critic Jeffrey Steingarten. A contributor to several cookbooks, her memoir Talking With My Mouth Full was published last February, and she directs special projects for Food & Wine magazine. On Oct. 23, she'll be the special guest at the Melanoma Foundation's Shades of Hope Gala, to be held at the Mandarin Oriental, Boston. Simmons lives in New York with her husband, Jeremy.

Jonathan Soroff: You're in town to help the fight against melanoma. Are there foods that protect the skin?
Gail Simmons: Your skin is the biggest organ on your body, and you can protect it by eating well. Foods with lots of antioxidants and omega-3s, for instance. Wild-caught salmon. Blueberries. Dark, leafy greens.

Do you wear sunscreen 365 days a year?
I do. And everyone should. I'm the person on every vacation wearing a hat, scarf, long sleeves. I'm so fair I don't burn. It goes straight to a rash.

Do you get extra UV rays from a combination of studio lights and Tom Colicchio's head?
[Laughs.] I think his head gives me vitamins and minerals. It just emanates those things.

Most underused spice?
There are so many great kinds of pepper, from Aleppo to dried chili peppers, and straight-up black pepper.

One dish you've never mastered?
I'm not a great baker. The world of pastry eludes me.

What about the theory that people are either great chefs or great bakers, but rarely both?
I think that's true, and I think that it has to do with personality types. Baking is chemistry, and if you're the type of person who likes to be very exact and measure things and do things precisely, you're better suited to baking than someone like me. I'm more a dash of this, a pinch of that, improvisational kind of cook.

Favorite ethnic cuisine?
Vietnamese.

Coolest current kitchen gadget?
I'm not a big gadget person. I don't need an electric pepper grinder. I like to sear my meat and put my fingers on it to see if it's done. I like to get close and cuddle with my food. But I do have a Sodastream soda-maker that I'm obsessed with.

Are cookbooks their own form of literature?
Absolutely.

So which would be the great classics?
Oh, God, the old French ones, like Escoffier and Brillat-Savarin, Julia Child and Jacques Pépin, Mark Bittman's How to Cook Everything, The Silver Palate, Joy of Cooking.

How many cookbooks do you have?
At least 1,000, which is a lot less than some people, but I'd like to point out that I live in New York City. And that's part of the reason why we just bought a house in Brooklyn.

Any thoughts on food historians who try to do things like recreate Henry VIII's feasts?
It's fascinating. It's part of anthropology, and it tells us where we came from. I love looking at old menus. Even the menus from the turn of the century, and how we were eating then, is so different.

Ferran Adrià, Eric Ripert and Anthony Bourdain send you Valentine's cards. Whose makes your heart go pitter-pat?
Oh, Eric, by far. Come on, now. I love them all, but that's an easy one. I've been privileged and humbled to share a table and spend time with all of them, and they're all brilliant. But Eric? Just look at the man, for God's sake.

Grossest thing you ever ate?
The grossest thing I've ever eaten wasn't because the ingredients were gross, per se. It was more the preparation. Although I've eaten stuff like fried larvae and the innards of animals from the African savannah, kudu and wildebeest.

Isn't writing about food in Vogue a little like writing about yoga in Popular Mechanics*?*
No. It's more about the person who's writing it. The correct writer could make a story on yoga very, very interesting to a mechanic if you position it the right way.

Oblique comment to use with a friend who serves you something you don't like?
I always say how grateful I am to have someone cooking for me. So many of my friends are intimidated to cook for me, which is ridiculous. I'm just thankful for the invite.

Favorite seduction dish?
I've only seduced one person in the last 12 years, and he's a really easy target. Anything that has chocolate, banana and peanut butter, in any order, gets him every time.

Guilty pleasures: McDonald's, Doritos?
No. I don't really consider them guilty because I don't eat them that often, but I do have a weakness for salt and vinegar chips and spicy buffalo chicken wings.

Are restaurant kitchens as disgusting as we've all been led to believe?
They're not disgusting at all, if the right person is in charge. The kitchens I've worked in were immaculate. Daniel Boulud's kitchen is a fine-tuned machine, and it's spotless.

Top three food-centric movies of all time?
Delicatessen, Big Night and Tampopo, maybe?

How do you stay so skinny?
I take care of myself and exercise more than I want to. I have to. My life revolves around being on camera in front of millions of people. I stuff my face with food on TV and consume a lot of calories every day. And I love food. You practice restraint. It's a question of balance. ✖✖✖

Ming Tsai

*It's the Real Ming

AFTER YEARS SPENT COOKING FOR SUBURBANITES, ONE OF BOSTON'S MOST ICONIC CELEBRITY CHEFS IS COMING TO TOWN.

by NANCY GAINES / photographs by MICHAEL PIAZZA

Grooming: Maryelle O'Rourke/Team Artist Representative

"IT WAS THE MOST nervous about Blue Ginger when I heard Julia Child was coming," says Ming Tsai. It's an August afternoon 14 years later, on what would have been Child's 100th birthday. "I'm cooking my heart out," he says, recalling Child's visit to his new restaurant in Wellesley that was fast garnering early raves. "Foie gras shumai… and she loved it. She shakes every cook's hand, like they do in France, then sits down.

"All of a sudden, I hear, 'Julia wants to speak to you.' My heart sinks. 'Ming!' she says. 'You don't have one woman line cook!'"

It simply isn't easy being Ming.

A bundle of contradictions, Tsai refers to himself as Chinese, although he's homegrown American, born in California, raised in Ohio, schooled in New England, the third generation in his family to go to Yale. He hates the term "fusion" cuisine, of which he's the culinary avatar. His menus feature pairings like New Zealand rack of lamb with taro corncakes and adobo cream, or black-garlic lobster with lemongrass fried rice.

He hates the term "fusion" cuisine.

"Fusion is a forced event, like atoms," says Tsai, the son of a rocket scientist. "You can put anything in a blender, but if you don't understand your ingredients, it's con-fusion cuisine."

He loves squash and golf—arguably the fastest and the slowest sports. While tall, dark and handsome, he looks just like he does on TV, except slightly heftier in person, contradicting the conventional wisdom that the camera adds 10 pounds on anyone. A devotee of Chinese herbal medicine, he swears "energy doctors" can cure anything, like they did with his son's dreadful allergies. "Except when I have a headache from drinking. Then it's Advil."

A smart-ass Ivy Leaguer, Tsai is a cutup. He could've done comedy. But he says he'd be awful. "As a chef, I'm a good comic."

Hosting a demo-dinner for 48 people who've paid $198 each to watch him, he works the crowd with corny jokes. Adding black garlic to his dish, he quips, "Where do I find it? The black-garlic market!" Badda boom.

Is the patter pro forma? "Rehearsed? No," he says, flatly, then with a wink and a nod, "but, look, I've done this before." Two nights later was a demo for auto-czar Ernie Boch Jr. and his posse. "I've always been very sarcastic," Tsai says. "I try to make fun of people as much as I can." Not exactly Zen-like.

"My blood is 100 percent Chinese," says Tsai. "My heritage, my way of thinking, my philosophy is East. Respect your elders, education, family, food." East Meets West, both the title of Tsai's first cooking show and his cuisine concept, is a blending, he says. He mixes Eastern and Western renditions around one key ingredient, showcasing the conceit that opposites attract. He uses intensely flavored sauces, rubs and added ingredients to alter the character of, say, bean sprouts in a stir fry, a summer roll or a salad with warm shiitakes, Chinese chives and ham vinaigrette. The idea may espouse simplicity, but it's not simple.

His show Simply Ming focuses on melding Asian-Western cuisine with cutting-edge techniques, exotic ingredients and famous guest chefs. Next week, he's filming a segment in the Azores. With all his emphasis on oneness, Tsai is a composite of all the places he's lived, the people he's admired and the food he's experienced. The synthesis is, of course, complex.

At a time when food shows are cheap vaudeville, Tsai is something of an atavism. A one-man melting pot—or, perhaps better, a Le Creuset—he was in the manner of Mandarin cooking born, then schooled in Japanese and French culinary arts. He mingles feng shui with haute dude, pioneered classy TV cheffing in comfy suburban style, wrote books, traveled, got famous, became a household name.

"He's the Yo-Yo Ma of food," says a fan and friend of both.

By now,

Tsai is comfortably settled in his 10-year-old Simply Ming PBS slot, stationed by the 1950s blue-haired rocker reunions. He won an Emmy for East Meets West on the Food Network (1998-2003), slapped down Bobby Flay on Iron Chef, published four cookbooks. A multimedia package titled Simply Ming in Your Kitchen appears next month. But he eschewed the trend to open outposts in his name. "I could've gone Vegas," he says. "I'm one of the only ones who still has one restaurant. I stay here because of the quality of the product and the quality of life."

"A restaurant can't have a 14-year successful run in the suburbs without the focus, drive and confidence of a Ming," says Jeremy Sewall, chef/co-owner of Boston's Eastern Standard, the Hawthorne, Island Creek Oyster Bar and Lineage in Brookline. "I go to Blue Ginger regularly, and I see him there all the time. He's a very focused guy. And funny."

Sewall chuckles. "Definitely more West than East."

At 48, Tsai is forgoing mise en place to shake up his pleasant, but arguably dull, empire. After all, Sandra Lee cooks "East meets West" these days. Tsai's new restaurant, Blue Dragon, is scheduled to open by January in Boston's thrumming Seaport District. The idea is a relatively small (75 seat) "Asian gastropub."

"That's so Ming," says friend of 20 years chef Ken Oringer, who owns six restaurants in Boston and Maine. "Classically trained in three cuisines, he wants to try something different." A year younger than Tsai, Oringer was chef de cuisine at Silks in San Francisco in 1992 when Tsai arrived as a sous chef. "He's an amazing guy. He loves food; his parents love food. He knows how to make great food. And he's constantly trying to get better and better."

"I could've gone Vegas. I'm one of the only ones who still has one restaurant."

Tsai tells how his father, Stephen, now 83 and a professor emeritus at Stanford, was the chief scientist at Wright-Patterson, one of the country's largest air force bases, near Dayton, Ohio. He's a world expert in, of all things, composites (like graphite). Ming's grandfather had traveled from Hunan Province to Yale to get a degree in economics in 1917, then sent his son there 30 years later, where he met Ming's mother, Iris. Her parents taught Chinese at the school.

When Tsai and his brother were young, their father would "save money on trips by going to these rinky dink hotels," recalls Tsai, "but spend quadruple on dinner." Iris, now 80, often appears on Simply Ming and operated a Chinese restaurant where, as a boy, Ming helped out.

By his father's design, the future chef went to Phillips Academy in Andover, where he was a star squash player. Ditto Yale, where he met the coach's sister, Polly Talbott, a WASP from, coincidentally, Dayton, who was studying Chinese at Colorado University. "She didn't want anything to do with this cocky squash player," he recalls. "But I slowly whittled at it." They married in 1995 and have two boys, David (Jai-Lung), 12, and Henry (Jia-Ming), 10. "My kids," says Tsai, "are 50-50 East and West."

Always the complex (and compound), Ming parlayed preppy charm and athletic ability to acceptance to Yale despite lackluster grades. But there he digressed. After spending summers living and cooking with a French family while studying at the Alliance Française and Le Cordon Bleu, he turned away from his father's engineering path. "There were three rules of life in my family: You can be anything, as long as it's a doctor, lawyer or engineer. You can get any grades, as long as they're straight As. You can marry anyone. We prefer Chinese."

He laughs. "I'm 0-for-3."

Still, the man's got a mechanical engineering degree from Yale

(although he says, "I wouldn't want to fly in a plane I built"), a master's from Cornell University's prestigious hotel-management school, is fluent in three languages (English, French and Mandarin), has the Cordon Bleu stamp and trained under master chef Kobayashi in Osaka, Japan.

When he told his parents he wanted to be a chef, he says his mother hugged him and urged, "Go follow your dream." His father noted, "You weren't going to be much of an engineer anyway. Go cook." So in 1998, Tsai opened Blue Ginger in Wellesley, a town he and his wife pinpointed as a desirable demographic. The Tsais, however, live in next-door Natick. "We couldn't afford Wellesley," he says.

By that fall, Esquire magazine had named Tsai the best new chef of the year.

Many other awards followed, with attendant public appearances, a loving profile in The New Yorker and TV shows (a third, Ming's Quest, aired in 2000-01 on the Food Network) winning him a worldwide following. He's a member of the Bocuse d'Or USA Foundation's Culinary Council, a panel of 33 industry experts who advise the culinary equivalent of the Olympics. These days, he's also a gadabout. In mid-August, for example, he and Polly sampled gastropubs in Dublin. "That's total Ming," chuckles Oringer. "You've got the French and Chinese thing down, so learn about pubs in Ireland. Believe me, there's nothing simple about a guy who'd study and study to be an engineer, then wonder whether he should open a restaurant or be a professional squash player."

From Dublin, Ming hopped to L.A. for its food and wine festival and red-eyed to Boston. Starting Monday, the week included two demo-dinners at Blue Ginger; picking up the kids from summer camp; golf; confab with Mayor Menino; photo op with the giant sea turtle at the New England Aquarium (that Tsai jokes that he put on a diet); and, lo, some actual restaurant work.

As befits Complexly Ming, the poster boy for celeb-chef good behavior is friends with Mr. Nasty, Anthony Bourdain ("so cynical, but a genius"). Yet Tsai still bristles when he recalls getting bested by Marc Forgione and Marco Canora in the 2010 The Next Iron Chef competition. "Forgione oversalted the halibut," Tsai pronounces. "They were looking for someone to replace (Mario) Batali. Think they wanted an Italian guy from New York?"

And the man likes to have fun. The flamboyant Duff Goldman (Ace of Cakes) will be a guest on an early episode of Simply this season. "It's hilarious," says Tsai. Putting on his modesty chapeau, he says regarding his Emmy win in 1998 for East Meets West, beating Martha Stewart, Bob Vila and Julia Child in the process, "It was great just to be nominated. Maybe they needed to fill the Asian quota."

Tsai slipped from the local public's quicksilver consciousness during the '00s while quietly becoming an international household name. During that time, his pal, developer Sean Gildea, had bought this great building, home of the former A Street Deli, in the booming Seaport District. It took a year and a half, says Tsai, to come up with a simple, contrarian concept. "The Remys, the Legals, the 14,000-foot Empire—they're monsters," says Tsai. "And I didn't want to be dependent on good weather."

It was an attractive business model. A gastropub of approachable size and price, open in the heart of boomtown for lunch, takeout, cocktails, dinner and late-night ("industry people could be a quarter of our business if we get our 2 am license"). And it'll bring Ming Tsai cuisine to Boston. He couldn't pass it up.

Like Blue Ginger, Blue Dragon's name was mostly Polly Tsai's whimsy. "'Blue is my favorite color, ginger is the best spice, this is the year of the dragon,'" he recounts of his wife's thought process. "The key to a restaurant name is: Can you pronounce it? Can you spell it? If not, f it, it's over."

When it opens in the year of the snake, Blue Dragon will serve dishes like "our version of fish 'n' chips, hacked Peking duck, our oysters with sauce like wasabi mignonette, Indonesian curry shepherd's pie."

Just nobody mention fusion. ✖✖✖

NOTHING FADES FASTER THAN A FOOD FAD. Wanting to seize the moment in menus, we asked five intrepid chefs (and one bartender) to name a dining trend for the year ahead, then concoct a dish that exemplifies the next big thing.

TRENDY TIMES

JOE CASSINELLI / PAINTED BURRO + POSTO

SUNDAE OF SWEET CORN GELATO, CHIPOTLE MEXICAN CHOCOLATE AND COCONUT-AND-AVOCADO ICE CREAM, WITH MEZCAL-SOAKED CHERRIES, CANELLA-GLAZED CASHEWS, SPICED PUMPKIN SEEDS AND HOUSE-MADE FLUFF

"People are getting away from sugary-sweet stuff in dessert," says Cassinelli, who operates his Mexican eatery alongside his acclaimed Italian one. "Chefs are using less sugar because it masks the nuances of the fruit. You want to taste natural flavors and textures." Hence his reliance on sweet corn, coconut and avocado for creaminess, with nips of spice from Mexican chocolate, canella and Mezcal. "We're playing with items usually associated with being sweet," he says. "Like sangria popsicles. It's trying to use foods that aren't normally thought of as being in desserts." In the same spirit, Posto serves a rosemary polenta cake with olive oil–scented ice cream. Adds Cassinelli, "I don't order crème brûlée or molten-chocolate cake."

HEALTH

RAW VEGAN PAD THAI

A believer that diet and vitality are inseparable, Dubois invented this dish as a comfort food and healthy takeout meal. "It's the anti–Red Bull, hamburger thing," says Dubois. "Doing it raw, vegan and healthy, so you can rejuvenate yourself through nutrition." The dish combines young Thai coconut noodles, daikon, carrots, cilantro, pea shoots and jalapeño, with the traditional shrimp being replaced by whole jumbo cashews. "They're the same shape and offer the same protein." Tossed with coconut foam, warm spices and garlic, "it contributes to energy levels and well-being." Such benefits are much on the minds of consumers who're increasingly gluten or dairy intolerant, or who spurn the sallow deflation of a calorie hangover. "I believe in eating for beauty," says Dubois.

"Everything starts new, but ends up everyday."

NEW GRAINS

MATTHEW GAUDET / WEST BRIDGE

VENISON WITH FREEKEH, MASTIC CREAM, WORCESTERSHIRE AND GOLDEN-RAISIN PUREE AND STREGA-INFUSED RADISHES

A dish grounded in the idea that spelt and farro are almost too conventional, the centerpiece venison highlights a complementary trend of nonindustrial meats. "Everything starts new but ends up everyday," says Gaudet. "Freekeh's got that fresh, nutty taste, and it pairs well with gamier meats. It's super high in protein, calcium, magnesium." Mastic cream lends an edge of pine resin, while the radishes have a peppery bite, cut by the herbal notes from the Strega. "It's an array of flavors," says Gaudet. "Pretty rare meat with a bit of chew, piney cream, bitter salad and nutty grain."

BLUR BETWEEN BAR AND KITCHEN

RACHEL KLEIN / ASANA

TERRINE OF FOIE GRAS WITH ROSEWATER AND PISTACHIO BEIGNETS, BLACK STOUT REDUCTION AND CRYSTALLIZED ROSE PETALS

Beer pairings are nothing new, but Klein sees a closer union between kitchen and bar. "Things are crossing over where beverage programs are using items usually associated with cooking, and the other way around," she says. Her seared foie gras terrine ("With the whole banning on the West Coast, I see a lot of people seeking out foie gras") is served with rosewater and pistachio beignets. "They give it kind of a carny feel," she says with a laugh. "And the beer's hops have that rose undertone," a concept spurred by a childhood memory of sniffing the air near a brewery and thinking of flowers. "The dark stout reduction plays well with the rosewater."

HIGHBALLS

JACKSON CANNON / THE HAWTHORNE

PHIL COLLINS

In today's tide of serious cocktails, a sense of fun is sometimes lost in the undertow. "A lot of craft cocktails are served in a coupe glass if they're a sour and served austerely down if they're positioned masculinely," says Cannon. "Now what I'm seeing is attention in bringing the same level of craft construction to highballs. In this climate of semi-super-seriousness, they can be more fun and approachable." Cannon's answer is a cousin of the Tom Collins, made of cucumber-infused vodka, yellow Chartreuse, a dash of local cranberry bitters and, of course, soda. "You end up with this long drink, with an effervescence that's unlocked from the shaking. You have these likeable, sweet, sour and floral qualities." Served with a metal straw, it's approachable but refined. "It's not rocket science," admits Cannon. "But there are principles."

RESPONSIBLE SOURCING, 2.0

JEFF FOURNIER / 51 LINCOLN + WABAN KITCHEN

LOCAL FLUKE WITH PEEKYTOE CRAB AND SWEET PEA RISOTTO

Since yellowtail flounder is now considered off-limits for responsible chefs, Fournier found an alternate in Massachusetts fluke. Pairing it with peekytoe crab ("It's rock crab from southern Maine. A few years ago the industry started calling them peekytoe"), dressed with crème fraîche and leaves of celery heart, the dish is grounded in a risotto cooked with onion, butter, Parmesan and peas from Brookline's Allandale Farm. "There's a lot going on in terms of waking up your palate." Carrots from the farm are prepared in two ways: in a silky puree and diced to give the plate texture. "We're getting stuff from the region in season," says Fournier. But the next step in the responsible sourcing movement is influenced by the fact that the public now knows that farm-to-table may not always mean the best flavor. "In November, there's only so much product you can get from here." The trick is opting for what's fresh when possible, and making careful choices.

FEST INTENTIONS

PREDICATED ON THE idea that optimism isn't just for displaying on T-shirts, the Life Is Good Festival returns to Canton on Sept. 22–23, headlined this year by Dave Matthews and Tim Reynolds. Cosponsored by The Improper, it's a weekend in the Coachella vein, with a generous slew of kids' entertainment.

Along with acts like Michael Franti & Spearhead, Eric Hutchinson and Sara Bareilles, festival-goers can revel in wholesome hijinks like sack races, bocce and seed-spitting. There's even an instrument petting zoo, should the tykes take inspiration from Trombone Shorty and want to noodle around with the brass section. All profits benefit Life Is Good Playmakers, a children's charity, keeping the theme appropriately youthful. MADELEINE COLEMAN

The Life Is Good Festival runs Sept. 22–23, $20–$120, at Prowse Farm, 5 Blue Hill River Road, Canton (888-339-2987) lifeisgood.com/festival.

In Step To the Pointe

Since its inception in 1952 by dancer/choreographer Amalia Hernández, Ballet Folklórico de México has captivated audiences with its vibrant blend of history and dance. Fiery drumbeats and raucous mariachi accompany the 48 members of the company as they reenact Native American deer hunts, showcase elegant lasso work and honor La Adelita—the female revolutionary soldier who accessorized her iconic uniform of a sombrero and bold-hued skirt with a rifle and straps of ammunition. This celebration of Mexican folklore opens on Sept. 22 at the Citi Performing Arts Center's Shubert Theatre.

Movies Edited by Hannah Sheinberg

Columbia Pictures/Photofest

Reviews by Sean Burns

The Amazing Spider-Man ★ ½ It's déjà vu all over again in this lazy, rote retelling of the web slinger's origin story, rebooted a mere 10 years since Sam Raimi's effervescent adaptation just for the sole purpose of allowing Sony to keep the movie rights. That's correct, it's a film that exists only as contract extension, and this two-and-a-half hour slog feels as inspired as that sounds. The Social Network's Andrew Garfield pouts and poses, as the title role has been recast as a somber Twilight-type haunted by his missing parents (who are teased to figure prominently in a sequel that's scheduled to hit theaters in 2014). That's the rub with modern franchise filmmaking: Everybody's too busy planning for subsequent installments that they forget to tell a coherent story in the first. Director Marc Webb, who debuted with (500) Days of Summer, has no sense of pacing or visual bravado, and the movie often grinds to a halt on curiously empty NYC streets. (In the suburbs.)

The Avengers ★★★ It was a rough takeoff. After five movies of buildup, the often crummy (see Thor, Iron Man 2, The Incredible Hulk) but occasionally wonderful (Captain America: The First Avenger) Marvel Films' strategy of building a bridge to nowhere at last pays off with a rock 'em, sock 'em, superhero spectacular, in which Earth's mightiest heroes team up to take on an alien invasion in midtown Manhattan. Playing out like a fanboy's nocturnal emission, we finally get to see what would happen if Iron Man fought Thor. But what makes the picture click is writer/director Joss Whedon's knack for snappy banter, as he supplies killer one-liners to Robert Downey Jr.'s debauched Tony Stark and plays to the fissure between Mark Ruffalo's laid-back line readings and his gigantic green alter ego. Massively scaled, coldly impersonal set pieces abound, but the character interactions zing. Whedon isn't much of an action director, but he's gifted with an overqualified cast and allows them to quip away to their hearts' content. (At Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Bachelorette ★★★ ½ This raw, hilarious, low-budget comedy is chock-full of drug use, casual sex and some inventive flights of profanity. I laughed myself sick. Adapted and directed by Leslye Headland from her stage play, Bachelorette is mostly about what happens when old friends resent each other's good fortune. High-school besties Regan (Kirsten Dunst), Katie (Isla Fisher), Gena (Lizzy Caplan) and Becky (Rebel Wilson) reunite when the latter is getting married to a millionaire. The obese, socially awkward Becky is the last of this quartet anyone would expect to live happily ever after, and don't think that's lost on the other three. Hence all the cocaine. Bachelorette is hysterical and awfully sad, somehow incorporating bulimia, abortion and overdoses into the breathlessly paced, farcical structure. It isn't Bridesmaids, it's Hurlyburly for women pushing 30. In her first stint behind the camera, Headland knows exactly when to drop the frenzy and allow an expression or two to sink in on her actresses' faces. There's some real depth going on beyond the shock value. This movie plays for keeps. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Beasts of the Southern Wild ★★★★ This Sundance sensation is one of the most poignant things I've ever seen. A portrait of a poor New Orleans community bracing for Hurricane Katrina, Beasts of the Southern Wild is so infused with fanciful flourishes that most of the time it feels like Days of Heaven by way of The Road Warrior. Young Quvenzhané Wallis stars as six-year-old Hushpuppy, who lives with her alcoholic father (Dwight Henry) in a junkyard community called the Bathtub. Director Benh Zeitlin drops us into this world with no explanation, and it may take a while to adjust to the harsh environment and oddball speech patterns. Oh, and there are also recently unfrozen, prehistoric aurochs roaming through the proceedings. It's a purposefully abstract piece, never a movie about "poverty" or "Katrina," but about something much harder to pin down. Eventually, it all comes down to Hushpuppy's indomitable spirit and a final shot that sends you soaring out of the theater. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Bourne Legacy ★ In 2007, Matt Damon and director Paul Greengrass brought amnesiac assassin Jason Bourne home to New York City with a smashing finale to a trilogy that only got better as it went along. Five years later, for no discernible reason other than a quick buck, series screenwriter Tony Gilroy cashes in with a superfluous franchise reboot, starring Jeremy Renner because classy Matt Damon wouldn't touch this garbage with a 10-foot pole. Renner stars as a chemically enhanced soldier targeted for elimination by the same old gang of white guys in front of computer screens. The catch is, Renner needs to find some more government-issued smart pills, otherwise, this superspy becomes super dumb. Call it Code Name: Algernon. The pacing is dead, and the structure is a disaster, as the story introduces an antagonist in the final reel—during a climactic chase—that would've arrived 40 minutes into any competent movie. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Celeste and Jesse Forever ★★ ½ Considering it's one of those vanity projects in which TV actors try to break into film by making a Sundance entry about the relationships of well-off urbanites, Rashida Jones' screenwriting debut isn't half bad. Or at least it's agreeable in that mode of movies that rip off When Harry Met Sally in the way When Harry Met Sally ripped off Annie Hall. Jones stars as a high-strung PR type who recently divorced her longtime sweetheart (Andy Samberg) even though they've remained best friends, and he still bums around in the guesthouse. It's clear their chummy arrangement has kept them from moving on, at least

The Brice Is Right

Don't Rain on My Parade

"Hello, Gorgeous!" It's a powerful greeting and Barbra Streisand's first line in the film that cemented her star status. After a long run on Broadway, Streisand took her role in Funny Girl to the big screen. The film follows Fanny Brice, a fast-mouthed New Yorker turned showbiz hotshot. A series of raunchy comedic performances helps launch her career, but her newfound fame threatens to destroy her marriage with a struggling gambler. See Brice's follies at the Coolidge Corner Theatre on Sept. 24.

until the plot contrives to have him deal with accidental fatherhood after a fling. The kicker is that sometimes people grow into the person you always wanted them to be after your time together is over—a melancholy conceit that this affable, sitcom-y picture doesn't quite figure out how to handle. (Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Cold Light of Day ★ ½ Shot two years ago and sitting on a shelf ever since, this is one of those lousy multinational productions usually cobbled together with the fun-money of some Israeli dry-cleaner who's hoping for a quick buck on the direct-to-video circuit. Of course, there are a couple of big stars in small roles to goose the proceeds. We've got Henry Cavill, who's playing Superman next year, as an awkward, recently bankrupt brat on a family vacation in Spain with his bulldog dad (Bruce Willis) and a lot of unpleasant expository dialogue. The family is taken hostage, and Willis soon exits the picture on the lookout for the nearest check-cashing office. It seems there've been some CIA shenanigans and something to do with angry Mossad agents. Mostly, this all leads to Cavill's hapless banker dude jumping off buildings, taking bullets and discovering his inner Jason Bourne, adrift in whichever foreign country gave the film's producers the most appealing tax shelter. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Cosmopolis ★★★★ In a deliciously sick joke at the expense of Twi-hards everywhere, Robert Pattinson stars as a zombified billionaire cruising across the island of Manhattan in a limousine that feels like a cocoon. Director David Cronenberg's astonishing adaptation of Don DeLillo's novel is so dense you can hardly take it all in with just a single viewing. Though most of the dialogue is almost verbatim from DeLillo's book, the story is imbued with the same dreamy, mordantly funny air as Cronenberg's Naked Lunch. With a wry sense of impending doom, this is an ice-cold, woozy nightmare of a movie. The sleek limo becomes a sort of purgatory, as the protagonist glides ever-forward toward ruin. Like all the best Cronenberg pictures, Cosmopolis is a pitch-black comedy about man's foolhardy attempt to impose order on the chaos of nature. (In the suburbs.)

The Expendables 2 ★★★ Of course it's garbage. Though the original was a surprise smash in 2010, Sylvester Stallone makes the sequel—a throwback to pre-CGI days, when manly men delivered terrible one-liners while laying waste to foreign countries—with an unnecessary gloss. The appeal of the first Expendables had a lot to do with Stallone's low-rent filmmaking style, but here he's handed the reins to Con Air director Simon West, who puts far too much of a slick Hollywood polish on the proceedings. Yet my heart still swelled with joy when I watched the icons of my youth blowing stuff up, shredding henchmen with automatic weapon fire and stealing each other's catchphrases. Like I said, garbage, but my favorite kind of garbage. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

For a Good Time, Call... ★ ½ Don't expect anything titillating from this alleged sex comedy, penned by actress/writer/Mrs. Seth Rogen Lauren Miller. For a Good Time, Call... focuses on a couple of unlikely roommates, played by Miller and Ari Graynor. They're a hapless pair, seen with a seriously unfunny callback to college escapades involving urine, and now they're managing to cover the rent on a swanky Manhattan apartment by running a phone-sex line. Obviously in this picture, the Internet hasn't been invented yet. Miller is the uptight goody-goody, an anonymous screen presence at best, while Graynor—who has a certain Bette Midler–ish comic quality—prances around in tight leopard-print clothes "exercising" on a stripper pole. Guess which one turns out to be a virgin in this movie's weirdly prehistoric parlance? Directed by Jamie Travis, For a Good Time, Call... is all loud colors and exaggerated reaction shots. It's so busy being shocked and snickering about the audacity of its subject matter that the audience need not bother. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Hope Springs ★★ ½ Tommy Lee Jones' rumpled poker face gets one hell of a workout in this almost-decent tale of marriage counseling by The Devil Wears Prada director David Frankel. Meryl Streep stars as a sexually frustrated housewife who signs herself and her hubby (Jones) up for intensive couples therapy in a Maine resort town. Steve Carell plays the shrink dead straight, smartly allowing questions about companionship and sex to ricochet off Streep's and Jones' sublime reaction shots. More melancholy than expected, Hope Springs wonders what happens when the thrill is gone. The movie takes the unfulfilled libidos of its AARP couple seriously, and it's unusual to see such frankness regarding characters of a certain age. (Meryl Streep gives oral? In a movie theater?) Unfortunately, Frankel is still a terrible filmmaker, and he slathers the soundtrack with a catalog of overplayed pop standards and resorts to a hokey montage every 10 minutes or so. Streep is predictably marvelous, but Jones' gruff, deadpan bleats steal the picture. (In the suburbs.)

Lawless ★★ In case you'd finally sorted out all of Bane's muffled, fey-Connery proclamations in The Dark Knight Rises, director John Hillcoat's Lawless provides another challenge in Tom Hardy dialogue recognition. Lawless is based on Matt Bondurant's 2008 book, The Wettest County in the World, an account of his family's bloody romp through the moonshine business in the 1930s. Scripted by murder balladeer Nick Cave—who previously collaborated with Hillcoat on The Proposition in 2005—Lawless seems torn between being a fanciful gangster melodrama and a harsher, more punitive film. Nobody wins. Hardy stars as the almost mythological Forrest, a quiet inspiration of terror among neighborhood locals, all of whom buy into the legend that he's some kind of immortal. (He's Tom Hardy, after all.) Playing the runt of the Bondurant litter, Shia LaBeouf is such a contemporary screen presence that you keep expecting him to whip out an iPhone and start texting from behind the wheel of his jalopy. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Magic Mike ★★★ ½ Director Steven Soderbergh's sideways take on Channing Tatum's origin story finds pathos beneath the beefcake. Inspired more by Saturday Night Fever than The Full Monty, it gyrates comfortably alongside Soderbergh's The Girlfriend Experience as a detached portrait of sex workers in a floundering economy. Tatum's goofy, aging stripper is suddenly forced to reevaluate a life of go-nowhere day jobs and boogie nights once he recruits the Kid (Alex Pettyfer) into his backstage world of manscaped pelvic thrusts. There are threesomes and drugs. But, as usual, Soderbergh eyes it all with clinical reserve, aiming for a painterly sociological study of a cash-only subculture living for the moment, because tomorrow is something that requires equity and an acceptance that dangles beyond the characters' grasps. Lording over them all is Matthew McConaughey in a showstopping turn as the slightly sinister, self-parodying club owner whose delusional grandeur suggests a bare-chested Mephistopheles. Between bumps and grinds, the film has a lot to say about class structure in America today. (In the suburbs.)

Moonrise Kingdom ★★★★ Director Wes Anderson's dollhouse sets and Peanuts costumes can sometimes distract from the pathos and heartbreak lurking beneath the surface of his twee tales of damaged men who refuse to grow up. While Moonrise Kingdom is Anderson's most meticulously designed picture, it's also his most emotionally accessible. Riffing on the young-lovers-on-the-lam genre (with plenty of shout-outs to Badlands and Pierrot Le Fou), the film finds star-crossed 12-year-olds running away from home on the fictional New England island of New Penzance during the summer of 1965. The adults in pursuit are a classically broken bunch, with Edward Norton as a scoutmaster out of his league, Bill Murray as a cuckold in denial and the pitch-perfect Bruce Willis as a heartbroken cop called "the sad dumb policeman" behind his back. Shot in gorgeously grainy Super 16mm, Moonrise Kingdom alternates between the flush of first love and the ache of middle-aged compromise. Just lovely. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

ParaNorman ★★★ ½ ParaNorman doesn't strive to replicate Steven Spielberg's 1980s Amblin Entertainment pictures. It just naturally belongs in that group. From Laika studios (who brought us Coraline a few years back), this is a rousing adventure full of big scares, goofy humor and a pointed message. It's like what The Goonies might've been, if The Goonies had been beautifully animated and not terrible. Kodi Smit-McPhee voices the title character, Norman Babcock, a lonely adolescent outsider with a Chia-pet hairdo who sees dead people. It's unfair to reveal more, as the surprise and delight of Chris Butler's screenplay lies in its sharp turns. That's the unexpectedly thoughtful thing about ParaNorman. The movie keeps upending your expectations, urging you to look beyond the surface. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Premium Rush ★★ ½ With a title more befitting of an energy drink, writer/director David Koepp's stripped-down, ticking-clock thriller is one of those time-wasters that's just good enough for passing a late-summer evening. Joseph Gordon-Levitt cements his nascent star status as Wilee "the Coyote"—a bike messenger zipping through rush hour traffic at unfathomable speeds. But on one particularly crappy Friday, Wilee finds himself delivering an envelope that's wanted by a belligerent cop with dental problems. Michael Shannon, our broken cuckoo clock of a character actor, plays this endlessly confounded doofus. Obviously, Wilee is really the Road Runner, as he frantically pedals his way out of one death trap after another, with only occasional pauses for pesky stuff like exposition. Premium Rush is non-stop action with a brightly colored, throwback gloss, reminiscent of the low-stakes VHS tapes of a forgotten era. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Queen of Versailles ★★★ ½ Originally intended as a snickering portrait of the grotesquely wealthy David and Jackie Siegel's quest to build the biggest, tackiest homestead in the history of real estate, director Lauren Greenfield's research lucked into a recession, and the economic collapse transformed a bit of reality-show lookie-loo into a strangely empathetic depiction of what happens when billionaires are suddenly forced to live like mere millionaires. Once, Siegel was the nation's most successful Florida time-share hustler, selling dreams of luxury to those who could barely afford them. But the chickens come home to roost with a vengeance after 2008's Wall Street disaster, and his adorably dim-witted trophy wife, Jackie, with breasts inflated to the size of basketballs, never quite grasps the enormity of the cataclysm. You can tell how much time has gone by in this picture by the amount of dog crap littering the carpet, as the couple's absurd manse lapses into decay. Their plight becomes America's writ large, except more tasteless. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Sleepwalk With Me ★★ Otherwise known as NPR Goes to the Movies, Sleepwalk With Me was produced by hipster godhead Ira Glass and takes a great 10 minutes or so of radio and stretches it out to an 80-minute running time, with no idea what to do with the visuals. You've probably heard the plot by now. I believe it started on The Moth spoken-word circuit, before Glass picked it up for his radio show. Short version: Mike Birbiglia is an aspiring stand-up comic not in love with his fiancée, and his anxiety manifests itself in a weird sleepwalking disorder. Weeks on the road precipitate a somnambulistic breakdown, and he has to make a few life choices. The end. This is a great radio bit, and Birbiglia has a conversational tone that's awfully ingratiating. Problem is that somebody decided to make his story a movie. Birbiglia spends the early reels talking directly into the camera, and the DIY aesthetic reeks of amateur hour. Nobody bothered to outsize this interior monologue into an actual motion picture. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Ted ★★ ½ Much like writer/director Seth MacFarlane's animated-TV shows, Ted is hysterical, until all of a sudden it isn't anymore. As most comedies these days revolve around man-children refusing to grow up, give MacFarlane credit for taking the gag to its logical conclusion and casting Mark Wahlberg as a 30-something who can't let go of his teddy bear. That the stuffed animal is a walking, talking drug user is only half of the joke. Seeking to settle down with his girlfriend, played by Mila Kunis—who unfortunately is presented as the same tired scold we see in most films in which women aren't allowed to be funny—Wahlberg's dopey meathead routine is a brilliant match for a perverted bear. Like all MacFarlane comedies, Ted leans mainly on non sequiturs and pop-culture references. His jokes rely on recognition, not wit. Still, it's all amusing for an hour or so, until it decides to have a plot. The third act is just stuffing. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

To Rome With Love ★★ ½ Last year's Midnight in Paris was profound in a breezy way. To Rome With Love is just plain breezy, but I didn't mind. Charming, second-tier Woody Allen, the film is a mashup of four disconnected shorts. (The picture sometimes feels as though Allen was rifling through his desk and came across some unfinished New Yorker pieces and decided to fashion them after the Italian omnibus films of the 1960s.) It's good to see Allen back on screen, kvetching and complaining his way through a Roman holiday when he discovers a brilliant opera singer who can only perform in the shower. There's some silliness with Roberto Benigni as an everyman who becomes inexplicably famous, and some bawdy jokes by Penélope Cruz as one of Allen's genius prostitutes. Best in show goes to Alec Baldwin as an aging architect revisiting his wayward youth and watching a younger version of himself make all the same mistakes. Clumsily stitched together, To Rome With Love is a trifle, but it's an agreeable one. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

The Words ★ Hilariously pretentious with almost nothing to say, this ponderous would-be epic from directors Brian Klugman and Lee Sternthal crafts three stories in a nesting-doll structure, each plot more ludicrous than the last. Bradley Cooper stars as a failed novelist who discovers a brilliant manuscript in a Hemingway-era satchel. Passing the book off as his own, he incurs the wrath of the original author, played by Jeremy Irons, who shows up here in some terrible old-age makeup and tries to singlehandedly make the picture amusing by sheer force of his scenery-chewing. The wannabe Philip Glass score and ostentatious camera movements suggest a bigger production, so the filmmakers add a badly miscast Dennis Quaid as a rough-and-tumble novelist spouting the picture's thesis statements. It's a movie about literature made by people who don't seem to like books very much. The Words grapples with antiquated notions of writers as Mailer-esque he-men, swaggering and screwing their way through a luxurious literary scene that doesn't actually exist anymore. This is a deeply stupid, silly picture. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Key Moment

Comeback Kid Five years ago, singer/songwriter Missy Higgins decided to quit—just like that. The Australian native quietly vanished from the music scene after multiple hit singles and a world tour, leaving it all to discover what she calls "normality." In 2010, however, she couldn't turn down the opportunity to join Lilith Fair, a move that jumpstarted her long-awaited return to the recording studio. Earlier this year, she released The Ol' Razzle Dazzle, an album she composed not as a contemplation on past relationships but in gratitude to her longest and truest affair: music. See Higgins perform with Gotye at the Bank of America Pavilion on Sept. 22.

A Room With a View

Teen Dream Capturing her daughters as both children and emerging young women, Rania Matar became fascinated by the transitional phase between girl- and womanhood. Inspired, Matar, who teaches photography at Massachusetts College of Art and Design and in refugee camps in Lebanon, embarked on a book, A Girl and Her Room, which portrays teenage girls alone in their personal spaces. Strewn with stuffed animals, makeup-crowded dressers and rock-band posters, Matar's photos are windows into girls' lives at moments in which they're both vulnerable and rebellious. See these portraits in Girls in Between: Portraits of Identity at the Photographic Resource Center at Boston University through Nov. 3.

girl scouts of eastern massachusetts

Once a Girl Scout, Always a Girl Scout

You were once a Girl Scout. You hiked trails and camped out under the stars. You canvassed your neighborhood to sell Thin Mints. You honed your skills with each badge you earned. You learned to lead.

Each of us has a success story to tell and memories to share. Reconnect with old friends, and support this new generation of girls.

You'll always be a Girl Scout.

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

BISTRO DU MIDI [272 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-426-7878, bistrodumidi.com] Bistro du Midi showcases authentic Provencal cuisine in a warm, welcoming, and beautiful setting. Inspired by the ingredients and culinary techniques of the Midi region in France, Executive Chef, Robert Sisca presents modern, ingredient-driven creations that are at once refined and approachable. From a carefully conceived charcuterie selection to the freshest seafood, meats and vegetables, Bistro du Midi brings the simple, clean and bold flavors of Provence to Boston.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 Tremont Street, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

THE PURPLE SHAMROCK [1 Union Street, Boston, 617-227-2060, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the freedom trail across from Boston City Hall on Union Street. The Purple Shamrock is the perfect place to stop by and have a bite to eat. The fare is composed of New England specialties with burgers, sandwiches, hearty pastas, fresh seafood, tender steaks and other great favorites. Let's not forget their infamous Shamrock Brunch served every Saturday and Sunday that is often paired with live music. After dark, The Purple Shamrock has nightly entertainment with a mix of live music, karaoke and DJ's. At The Purple Shamrock there is something for everyone.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street.

Brunch is served Saturdays and Sundays featuring new classics from Chef Leah DuBois such as "Toast To Life and Bacon" and the "Lobster MacMuffin". 'Spicy Pimento Cheese Fries' and 'Dixie Chicken" start the day right washed down with a Bucket of High Life ponies or the $5 Milkshake.

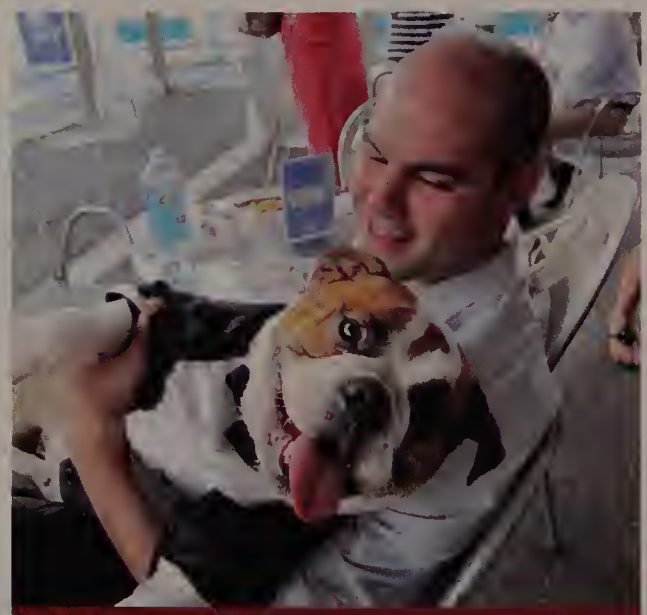
DOGGY STYLES



There's a Kink for Everyone

Sticking your nose in a stranger's nether regions and licking people's faces are generally frowned upon in social situations, but not at Party Animals, the benefit for MSPCA-Angell.

Held at the Bank of America Pavilion, cleverly renamed "the Pup Tent" for the occasion, the annual fund-raiser gathered the city's top dogs (and their canine companions), who sipped wine while overlooking Boston Harbor and reveled in the camaraderie of fellow dog-lovers.

Prominent among the throng: white-hot artist Hilary Harkness and business consultant Dorie Clark accompanied by contemporary art curator Al Miner, the smoking-hot twosome of Neal Minahan and Bob Vigneau with their equally beautiful hound, Newton, the affable Jason Goodell and lovely Amanda Daniels with Chappy (their Lagotto Romagnolo, an Italian truffle-sniffing dog), Brahmin restaurateur George Lewis and the stunning Claudine, the gorgeously expectant Jessica Nigrelli and her handsome other half, Andrew, XV Beacon chatelaine Amy Finsilver and Heidi (quite possibly the softest dog on the planet), Southie home-slice Jeff Finnegan, who dressed his bulldog, Charlie, in a tuxedo, kitchen supply mogul Michael Tigar with TV-personality Michael Tarshi (aka "Hyman Cashman"), and one woman who observed, "There are a lot of cute dogs here," to which her friend responded, "More importantly, there are a lot of cute guys."

However, the evening's funniest exchange was when a man whose husband was holding their dog's leash said, "I'm both of their masters," to which the person he was talking to replied, "Oh. Then where's your husband's collar?"

You Can't Write Dialogue Like That

Opening Night of the Martha's Vineyard Film Festival (proudly sponsored by The Improper Bostonian) is one of the rare social occasions on the island where the conversation doesn't revolve entirely around real estate, and who paid what for which house or who put theirs on the market.

Instead, the convivial gathering, held beneath a tent at Saltwater Restaurant in Vineyard Haven, attracted film buffs and artistic types who chattered about the arts in general.

> It's one of the rare occasions when conversation doesn't revolve around real estate.

Present and accounted for: NPR radio stars Paula Lyons and Arnie Reisman, renowned landscape architect Carlos Montoya (son of the world-famous flamenco guitarist), award-winning cookbook author Joan Nathan, foxy actress Brooke Adams (sans husband Tony Shalhoub), Lunachick Linda Comstock, activist/midwife Pam Portney, prominent attorney Benjamin Reeve (a doppelgänger for his movie-star brother, Christopher) with his main squeeze, Kathy Sterling, documentarian Liz Witham (who was screening a film about her musician cousin, Ben Taylor), festival organizer Richard Paradise (who deserved and got three cheers for finding the festival a permanent home) and equally glittery others.

The evening's snarkiest exchange: a husband telling his wife, "Congratulations! That's the shortest version of that story I've ever heard you tell." To which she responded, "I left out the parts where you sound like a complete jerk." ×××

The IMPROPER

Love and Appetizers

Is the temperament of the universe comic, like Nick Altschuller's podcast at improper.com? Or is it tragic, like Nick Altschuller's haircut? If, according to the formula, all comedies end in weddings and all tragedies end in death, then life is necessarily tragic. So it's helpful to have comic interludes, especially ones with fancy cake.

Adam DeTour

Weddings are, of course, only really funny when the bride wears a clown suit. Otherwise, the union of two loving people is a cause for reflection on what, at the final tally, is the only subject of true worth during our fleeting stint in the sun. Most weddings involve some version of the 1 Corinthians 13 speech (see also: Beatles lyrics), observing that love is everything. Well, yes. But honest couples will add that there's a lot to be said for a reasonably-priced caterer and, man, wouldn't it be great if people didn't expect to hear Chris Brown's "Forever" on every playlist? Weddings, as an $86 billion industry, are testaments to the fact that human beings are slaves to canapés. There's a very good reason why we bless the inception of a new family by giving them a waffle iron. Which is to say that man does not live by bread alone, but he doesn't do terribly well without it. Weddings acknowledge this by bringing together the generations to celebrate the renewal of life, then having everyone do the Chicken Dance.

In this issue, contributing fashion editor Lydia Santangelo's visions of bridal gowns celebrate a renewal of unabashed beauty.

HOW SWEET

TONY TRAN began molding his future long ago. For the past nine months, his quirky clay figurines have appeared on local wedding cakes, but sculpting was an early talent. "I've never had the luxury of owning or being able to play with store-bought toys," says Tran, 25, an Everett native. "So I ended up making my own toys out of clay." Working from a photograph, Tran now molds caricatures in the model of brides- and grooms-to-be, capturing the couples' idiosyncrasies and imparting his own. "My style is influenced by Saturday morning cartoons I watched as a kid," Tran says. Today, his designs take the cake.

Good Eats

Rabbit Is Rich

You've spread meat on toast at restaurants all over town, but the rabbit rillettes at Belly Wine Bar will give any charcuterie connoisseur pause. Using techniques he picked up from old recipe books and from a stint at Thomas Keller's Bouchon, chef de cuisine Robert Grant devotes nearly 24 hours to salt-curing, confiting and mixing whipped butter in his rabbit, which renders it rich yet delicate. The potted shreds come capped with a condiment—Armagnac-laced prunes that are sweet but still pack bite. If you're bored with the standard platters, here's a dish to put a hop in your step. ELIZABETH BOMZE

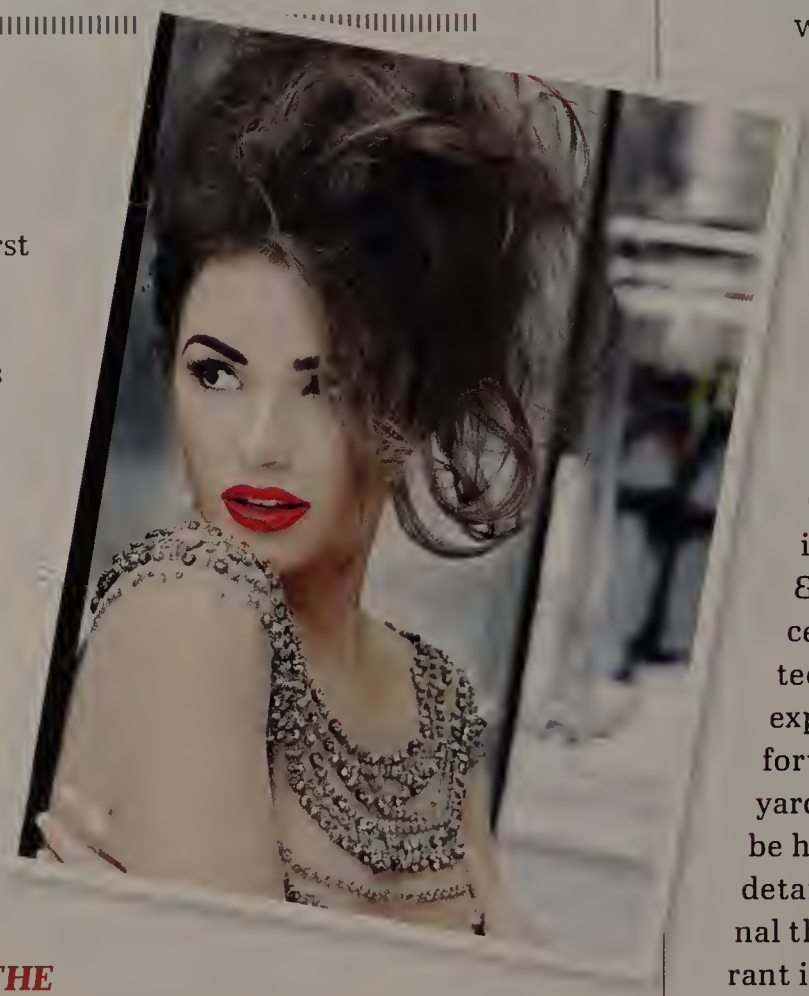
Beauty

Sitting Pretty



Boston University student Olivia Culpo won her first pageant, a state title, with a $20 rental dress and a whole lot of poise. Months later, she was crowned Miss USA 2012. But it's not all triumphs and tiaras for this beauty queen. Culpo, 20, needs to care for her skin, just like the rest of us. After all, she says, "You're stuck with your skin for life." Here are the trade secrets of her dermatological routine.

COOL AS A CUCUMBER Take advantage of the fruit's natural moisture, which decreases swelling and dark bags around your eyes.

SCRUB-A-DUB-DUB Exfoliate your skin to remove dead skin cells and prevent dryness and blemishes, enhancing your natural radiance.

FIRST COAT Use a primer before your foundation. Doing so stops bacteria from seeping into your skin and wards off discoloration and age lines.

WHERE THE SUN DON'T SHINE Apply a moisturizer with a higher SPF rating (30+) to avoid unsightly spots, wrinkles and skin disease that result from sun damage.

THE BERRY NECESSITIES Load up on antioxidants, which slow down the aging process. Graze on fruit like blueberries and cantaloupe, and drink green tea and pomegranate juice to boost your intake.

CHOP SHOP

Coombs and Parsons go with the grain.

COMING TO THE SOUTH End, chef Christopher Coombs of Dbar and Deuxave plans to open the "modern" steakhouse Boston Chops this winter. What makes it modern? More affordable options than the traditional meat mecca, according to Coombs, who's paying close attention to the increasing price of beef. He plans to serve lesser-used cuts—hanger, flatiron, skirt—in a more bistro-like setting. Another difference: composed plates, instead of the usual à la carte approach. Of course, diners will still be able to order an old-school tenderloin. What about creamed spinach? "I won't say no, but I don't know if I've ever cooked it in my career," says Coombs.

COMING TO MILTON, chef Chris Parsons' locally sourced menu at Steel & Rye will feature dishes influenced by an array of American cultures, along with favorites from his former restaurant, Catch, in Winchester. Situated in a converted warehouse, Steel & Rye will retain the exposed ceilings and an industrial architecture, giving it, as Parsons explains, a "raw feel with comfort." With family-owned vineyards on the wine list and pasta to be hand-cranked in the kitchen, the details aim to underscore the artisanal theme. To Parsons, "The restaurant is [meant] to pass on the feeling of handcraft."

BUBBLING UNDER: Tonic in Jamaica Plain has closed, at least temporarily, after the departure of chef Ryan Kelly.

SAFE LANDING

When you enter Boma, opening Oct. 10 in the South End, you may wonder whether you've been transported to the ICA. Its sputnik chandeliers resemble Josiah McElheny's cosmic explosions on exhibit at the museum, creating a modern yet comforting atmosphere. It's also fitting. Although there's been some speculation around the name, Boma doesn't mean Boston, Mass. Rather, it's an African word of Persian origin meaning "safe haven"—the precise feel this new gastrolounge wants to evoke.

"We want to have our own identity," says Shane Manfred, who co-owns the restaurant with Scott Shaw. Balancing sophistication with lack of pretense, Boma is very different from Pho Republique, which occupied the space for more than a decade. Exposed brick, discovered when Manfred sledged through six inches of Sheetrock, gives the restaurant an antique, metropolitan feel tying together each of the areas—bar, front lounge, dining room and wine cove. The bar now dominates the left side of the 80-seat restaurant, with ample and spacious seating along the counter and at high tops, while the back wall features wood planks that form a utilitarian checkerboard for stashing wine bottles. Topped with a lattice, the wine cove is a dark and intimate space for a cozy dinner.

AMERICAN FARE MEANS A MELTING POT.

The menu echoes that intimacy through an emphasis on small plates that are weighted toward seafood and American fare. But executive chef Christopher Bussell, formerly of Terramia and Butterfish, doesn't skimp on creativity. Grilled swordfish, for instance, comes with crispy head-on shrimp and pan-seared gnocchi, artichokes and a lobster jus. "We're drawing from different areas of the world for our menu, while passing that all through the prism of the local, organic movement," says Bussell. American fare, of course, means a melting pot.

Bussell also offers tiny plates, like fontina tots with a gorgonzola dunk and a bruschetta consisting of house-made sourdough topped with heirloom tomatoes and crunchy black-lava salt. In all, his menu sports nearly two dozen smaller items. It's a testament to the notion of safety, and variety, in numbers.

TOUGH LOVE

Elizabeth Glasband, author of Are You Kidding Me? A Journal of First Dates, Flings and Finding Love, talks about her swim around Boston's dating pool.

Why did you decide to chronicle your dating life in Boston?
It started off as a joke, where I just had so many crazy stories and I knew that so many other people had stories like this. My friends were joking around that I should create a scrapbook, with a profile about each guy that I've gone out with. While I thought it'd be funny, I couldn't really share it—I'd get sued by everyone who was in there. But I liked the idea of sharing these stories, so then I decided to chronicle them all in a journal and just change the names.

Is it hard to admit your dating mistakes?
Yeah it is. Looking back, I can see how it's just so easy to get wrapped up in a relationship and feel that there's no one else who's going to make you feel the way that you do. Truth is, when you remove yourself and have time to get over someone and move on, there's so much that you can reflect on. I think that you have to live your life and go with your gut. And if you make mistakes, you learn from them.

What do you say to girls who think there are no good guys out there?
The more dating experience you have, you start to recognize sooner who's actually ready to be in a relationship, and who just plays the game for a couple weeks. There are definitely great guys, and when you meet the right one, it'll just be a lot easier than all the ones that didn't work out.

What do you say to guys who think there are only crazy girls out there?
I'd say that the guys make us crazy. When something's not right, it's more likely that either the guy or the girl is going to be crazy. When it's actually working, there's a lot less of the crazy behaviors. But, if guys are a little more up front, then girls would be a little bit less crazy.

How has your dating life been since you've published the book?
I've actually had a boyfriend for a year and a half now. We moved in together this summer. He read the whole book—just to know what it was about and to be supportive.

A CELEBRATION OF BELGIAN BEER

Best of Belgium

Belgium is renowned for its vibrant and diverse beer culture. A rich tradition of culinary invention and improvisation, combined with centuries of brewing passion and expertise, helped craft a stunning variety of beer styles enjoyed around the world.

Leffe Blonde was first brewed in 1240 by the monks of Abbaye de Notre Dame de Leffe in Belgium. A spicy, faintly clove-like aroma is balanced by Leffe's creamy body and restrained dry finish.

Stella Artois' rich brewing heritage dates back to 1366 in Leuven, Belgium, where it was first brewed to celebrate the holiday season. Traditional malted barley and the highest quality European hops give Stella Artois its full flavor and delicately crisp finish.

Hoegaarden is the Original Belgian Wheat Beer, dating back to the 15th Century. A naturally cloudy beer, Hoegaarden features a secret to its refreshing flavor and spicy nose: real Curaçao orange peel and a dash of coriander.

Always Enjoy Responsibly.

Wine

EVERYDAY PLEASURE

As far as I'm concerned, it's always time for Champagne. That said, most Champagne consumption in this country centers solely on celebrations and the flagship "brut non-vintage" category that dominates the market. If you want to expand your horizons, the following three choices are consistently delicious.

Brut Zero Ayala Brut "Zero Dosage" NV ($52, Federal Wine & Spirits) This category is for lovers of extremely dry Champagnes. As the name indicates, there's almost no sugar to balance the tart acidity. (Some houses that make a non-dosed Champagne will list it as "nature.") The Ayala is well balanced, with a bit of a lemony sting, but is also very creamy on the palate. Its minerality and chalkiness make it a great choice for lovers of Sancerre or Chablis. A plate of poached new scallops would be a heavenly accompaniment, as would sushi (hold the wasabi).

Rosé Veuve Clicquot Rosé, Brut NV ($65, Bauer Wine & Spirits) If Champagne is festive, rosé Champagne takes the party to another level. Veuve produces an appealingly bright, strawberry-scented rosé: very dry, with undertones of darker red berries. It tastes slightly fuller than most brut NVs and works wonders with meatier fish preparations, such as roasted monkfish or grilled swordfish. It also pairs with charcuterie and milder cheeses.

Demi-Sec Veuve Clicquot Demi-Sec NV ($60, the Wine Press) This is for those who like a taste of balanced sweetness. Made with considerably more sugar than other Champagnes, the demi-sec (meaning "half dry") from Veuve Clicquot has a ripe fruit aroma—peaches and apricots—to balance the usual pastry scents. It's got a supple, lush texture that makes it a great partner to flans, custards and fruit-based desserts, as well as mildly spicy Asian dishes.

Impersonals LASTWORD

TO THE IMPOLITICAL EDITOR: I can't figure out where you fall on the Freudian continuum, but the political continuum question is clear. Far left. Your talent is literary wit, not political wit. I had hope that the publication would end with the pro-Reagan response, but realized at next edition my fear was confirmed: You only let the other side speak because she specified Latina and feminist. Now some mechanic's kid is trying to distill the greatest presidency down to his father's sad lot. No president is without flaw. No presidency is to blame for all the bad or to claim for all the good. The editorial mistake was publishing the first piece, which was likely written by an Occupy sympathizer. And the Latina had the best point. It's about taking ownership of one's lot. The Reagan side stood up for personal responsibility in a dignified and eloquent fashion. The anti-Republican side threw stones and cast blame. The real point is that you are unqualified to babysit a political debate. Otherwise, keep up the good work, and maybe keep your letters less esoteric. Brian Brandt

To the competitive runner:

I enjoy going to the gym during the lull after the morning rush and before the crazy evening hours. There's no rush, no line for the equipment and no need for you to choose the treadmill directly next to mine when there are 22—yes, I counted—available and working. Your peering over my shoulder and subsequent adjusting to ensure you were jogging one mph faster than I was, or walking on an incline one degree higher, wasn't so subtle. Next time, I'll fling sweat in your direction. Appreciative of my personal space

To the elderly gentleman at the Burren:

I want to be you when I grow up. I want to be out on a Saturday night, cold beer in my hand, gettin' down to the Isley Brothers' "Shout" with some pretty young thing. I want to receive high-fives from bros, hipsters and bartenders alike, all because I'm having a good time at 90,000 years old. Also, I want to have the same gummy smile on my face at Dunkin' Donuts the morning after. A hopeful contemporary

Nut to Crack

This is how addiction starts. At Brian and Beth Quinn's newly opened storefront, the couple strategically places bowls of samples all over the room, fanning the impulse to snack. At Q's Nuts, you'll munch on roasted cashews, pecans, peanuts and almonds varnished with a cinnamon-vanilla glaze—the original flavor—as well as bolder tastes like sweet-spicy mango-cayenne and a "sassy" habañero and garlic. With more variations like Mexican chocolate and sea salt–rosemary, along with scoops of Christina's ice cream (they sell that, too), the flavor combinations know no bounds. Drink of the Moment

HITS THE SPOT

NAME: The Marksman PRICE: $12

INGREDIENTS: Rittenhouse Rye, Ximénez sherry, Cynar, Fee Brothers Aztec Chocolate Bitters, burnt orange.

TARGET DEMOGRAPHIC: Manhattan drinkers with a weakness for the dessert menu.

FLAIR/FLARE: Your server uses a match to lightly torch the orange peel garnish.

FLAVOR: An overt punch of orange in the nose, thanks to the oils released by the burnt peel. Then a wash of cool rye cresting with a lick of caramel from the sherry. Bittersweet Cynar helps ground the middle, while the drink comes fully back to earth with an aftertaste of cocoa and nutmeg.

GENDER ROLE: "It's a very masculine drink," says beverage director Olivia Vienneau, and its relation to the Manhattan establishes its Y chromosome. "Rittenhouse is 100 proof, so it's got a little bit of kick," which secures the drink's hairy-chested credentials. "The sherry's really the only sweet part."

PAIR IT WITH: Something rich and complex that can stand up to the rye, like miso chocolate pudding. Or Vienneau suggests crème brûlée, citing the play between burnt sugar and burnt orange.

CONTEXT: Deuxave's cocktail program avoids type-casting. "We have a cachaça drink, a rye drink, a cognac drink," says Vienneau. "We only have one vodka drink. I don't want to diss vodka. But if we do something with vodka, we want to highlight the other elements with it." Hence a forthcoming cocktail rooted in Concord grapes. ANDREW RIMAS

ASK THE EXPERT

ABBY LARSON / BLOGGER, STYLE ME PRETTY

WEDDING DOS AND DON'TS

Today a bride-to-be can "pin" every three-tiered cake or rustic floral arrangement she sees on the Internet. And it's likely that one of those pins comes from Abby Larson's Style Me Pretty, a blog filled with a myriad of wedding shots and do-it-yourself projects. With 1.5 million unique views monthly—constituting a larger audience than any bridal magazine on newsstands—SMP will also take over bookshelves in December with its first print compilation. For a taste of what's to come, the Boston blogger gives us her top-three wedding blunders—and how to avoid them.

Brides

Forgetting the One You're There For All the excitement (and stress) can get the better of you, leaving your groom in the background. Remember, it's a big day for him, too. Plan the event together to make it even more meaningful, meshing your cultures, passions and personalities.

Overdoing-It-Yourself Try not to take on too many projects. Make crafts a group activity, ensuring that they'll not only be fun but also create memorable moments with the ones you love.

Nixing the Coordinator Hire someone to organize the day. Partying with friends and family at your wedding should be the priority, not worrying about the DJ's playlist or the cake cutting. Plus, a planner can use professional connections to score major discounts.

Grooms

Forgetting to Date Your Fiancée Planning a wedding is hard work. Period. Lighten the mood by maintaining your pre-proposal romance, keeping the sparks flying all the way down the aisle.

Being Under- (Or Over-) Opinionated Your opinion—and you should have one—matters. Even if your bride doesn't need (or want) your help, make sure the event is something that you'll enjoy, too, keeping in mind that compromise is key.

Annihilated I Dos Skip the pickle backs before the wedding. Slurring your vows may stop her from wanting to say them at all. Instead get your blood flowing and avoid the jitters by throwing a football around with your groomsmen.

MAN OF CONVICTIONS

Offbeat Vineyard characters populate this legal yarn.

AFTER A STRING OF BAD times, including a long estrangement from his sons, Jake Dellahunt returns to Martha's Vineyard to do some lawyering. The shaggy denizens he encounters offshore include a fisherman who shot his wife and a chicken farmer who stuffed a decapitated dog's head into a mailbox. The extensive courtroom scenes produce complicated and surprising legal plotlines, while Dellahunt's gritty Vineyard roots contribute to convictions.

Dellahunt's hurt, angry son Jack reconnects with his dad through a case involving a ferry crash. Now bitten by the law bug, Jack, who works at the famous Black Dog Tavern, unearths some information that contributes to solving the case. Meanwhile, a Wampanoag handyman proves a steadying, somewhat ironic force in Dellahunt's life, and helps him by bringing a tribal shaman into the courtroom as an expert witness.

Jake Dellahunt, Vineyard Lawyer (with an office on the Cape)
by A.J. Cushner

Cushner's novel is set in Cape Cod.

Dellahunt's deepest quest—in honor of his dead partner—is to clear the name of an innocent man executed in 1942 in a case involving U-boats on South Beach. It's a task he tackles with bittersweet success. The character's righteousness, and his dark side, adds flavor to the story's broth. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 109: He took her in his arms. She was perfume and dishwashing detergent, and he kissed her until she limply melted into him. His lips touched hers as he said, "I really wanted to call you. It's just that I've been working on the ferry case."

She held her lips to his. "I know. I heard about the Proxigean Tide thing. Do you believe it?"

He glued his lips to hers. "Mmm. I believe two celestial bodies can create some wicked strong magnetism."

NATURE CALLS

How to spend a perfect day at Ipswich's Crane Estate

IN CRANE SIGHT Gilded luxury meets natural wonder in Ipswich.

THE CRANES COULD'VE been the protagonists of a Wes Anderson film—quirky, charming and appallingly wealthy. Their estate—a 2,100-acre spread on the Ipswich coast that the family gifted to the Trustees of the Reservations in the mid-20th century—has an elaborate but enchanting history. It includes a mansion (twice built), an inn, seven islands, miles of white-sand beaches, acres of dunes and a wildlife refuge—all of which you, as a guest at the Inn at Castle Hill, feel like yours.

The inn, built in 1843 as a farmhouse, is the oldest structure at the Crane Estate. Today, this 10-room bed-and-breakfast offers comfortable, modern accommodations and unobtrusive service, complementing the luxury of the grounds. Rooms, named for members of the Crane family, are located on all three levels. Make a point of requesting Higinbotham for third-floor views of the Atlantic and surrounding marsh and woodlands, or Miné for those same views at the second level, plus a fireplace. Or go all out and rent the entire inn for a Crane-scale sleepover.

Although the inn doesn't have a restaurant or permit food in the rooms, its kitchen offers daily teatime as well as a full-service breakfast—and not the continental kind. Think vegetable quiche made with produce from the on-site gardens and eggs from nearby Appleton Farms, which the Trustees also own.

For a picturesque (indeed, perfect) day, follow breakfast up with a tour of the Great House, a Stuart-style manor designed for the family in 1924 by Chicago architect David Adler. Even if you're not into museums, this indoor excursion is a must. It's less a stodgy trawl through history than it is a peek into an odd yet intriguing family. Plus it's the only way to poke around this 59-room mansion

✓ Traveler's Checks

See how the 99 percent lived on the Hot and Cold Tour, which includes a look at the Great House's roof.

For a tasty lunch or dinner, visit Spice Thai Kitchen in Ipswich for surprisingly authentic cuisine.

There are reusable aluminum water bottles in every room at the inn, stamped with the Trustees' logo and available to you at cost ($6).

Stop at Ipswich's Russell Orchards on your way home for fresh apple-cider donuts and fruit picking.

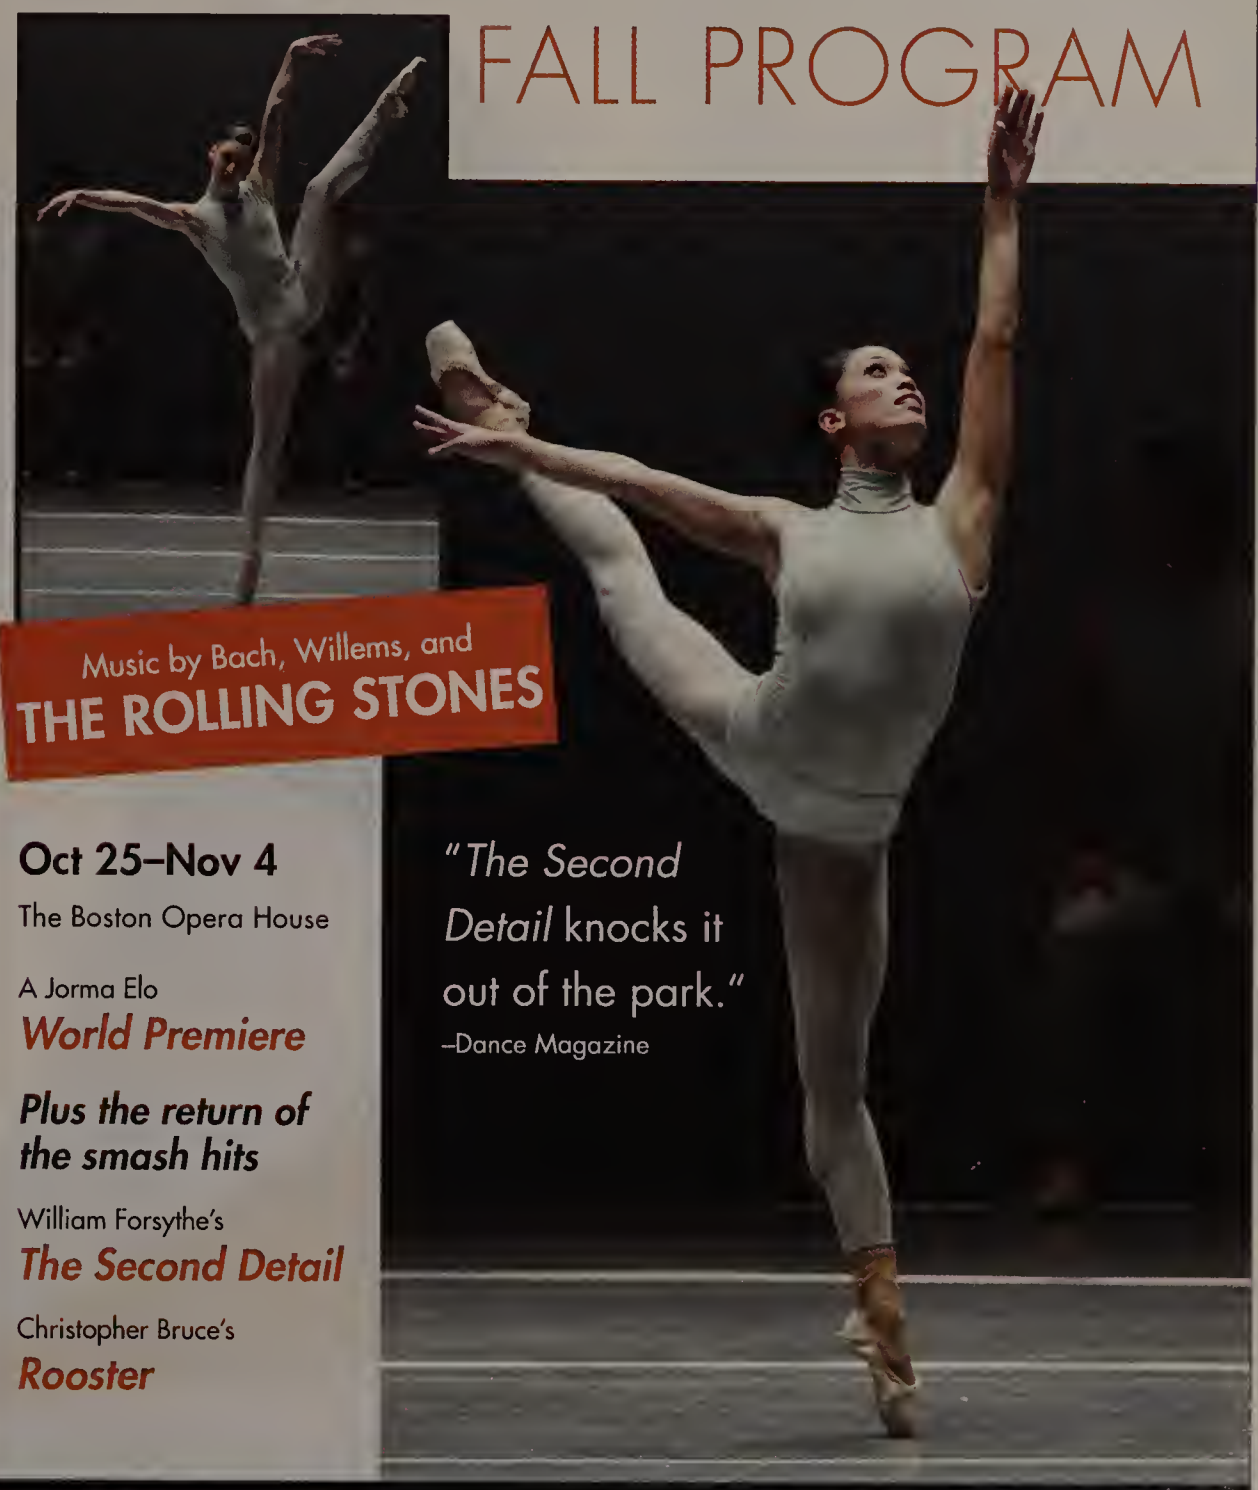
unless you attend a wedding there (which people do) or film a movie on the grounds (see Matthew McConaughey in Ghosts of Girlfriends Past—actually, don't).

Look for the original Earls of Essex crests that hang high on the library's walls, which were brought from the earls' manor. Keep your gaze high in the rotunda as well, to see a painting by Chicago artist Abram Poole, composed in mimicry of one of Mrs. Crane's favorite works seen on a European tour, but with custom alterations adding esteemed members of the service staff and the house Siamese cat.

After touring the mansion, make sure to stroll the grounds. Start at the back of the house, between the two griffins—a gift to the Cranes from former employees—for a look down the Grand Allée. Designed by landscape architect Arthur Shurcliff in 1914, it's a half-mile stretch of lawn spread over three man-made rolling hills with 700 Norway spruces and 14 statues lining the trek. On a clear day, the Allée perfectly frames the Isles of Shoals, 18 miles out. This vista, sandwiched by oblique coastal views, typifies the estate's landscape design, a juxtaposition of natural and manicured beauty.

Borrow a mountain bike from the inn and continue your exploration of the grounds with a quick trip to Crane Beach. Time the outing with low tide to wade through the warm, ankle-deep pools, scattering tiny fish with your feet as you go.

Start your return journey just as the sun begins its descent. Follow signs for the exit, but veer right down a Secret Garden–looking path, overgrown and somewhat rocky, letting the mountain bike do the work. This ride, though maze-like (stay left at the first fork, right at the second, and take a hard right when the path becomes a road again), lands at the bottom of the last hill in the Grand Allée. Head up to the crest to watch the sun set over the Great House, a half-mile behind you, with the sky burnishing the European-inspired landscape into a Disney-style fantasy. Remember to breathe.



While there's still a glimmer of light, follow the trail around the east side of the grounds back to the inn. Just as dusk settles, cozy up in a rocking chair on the patio, blanket in lap and complimentary glass of wine in hand, while deer graze at the base of a tree not 10 yards away. It's an experience the Cranes would've known. And as the mosquitoes begin their evening gyre, it's worth remembering that the simple pleasures of 100 years ago remain just as pleasurable today. ✖✖✖

CHICKEN LITTLE

Where the price for a full belly is an empty wallet

Yakitori Zai
315 Shawmut Ave., Boston
(857-350-4450)
yakitorizai.com

STICKER SHOCK The beautifully grilled kalbi is one of many strong non-poultry items at Yakitori Zai.

THE WAITRESS LOOKED befuddled, as if I'd asked for a live rooster and not a takeout container. "We don't have those," she said apologetically. Her response was understandable, since I was probably the first person at Yakitori Zai, a high-end Japanese grilled-chicken joint, to ever walk out with leftovers.

Opened in July by the team behind the cheerfully Americanized Snappy Sushi restaurants, Yakitori Zai aims for the opposite extreme by fetishizing authenticity. Chef Sho Inoue, a 26-year-old with 10 years of yakitori experience, is from Japan. Same with the binchotan, or white charcoal, which burns at a lower temperature and imparts a cleaner, less smoky flavor than those normally used in the States. And although the chicken is delivered daily from a farm in Connecticut, it's a European black-feather breed that's a close approximation of jidori, the heritage bird commonly served in Japan. All of this effort, however, didn't temper my unease about spending a ludicrous amount of money for a minuscule skewer.

On my visits, I sat at the bar, where a glass panel provided a view of grillmasters at work. The house specialty comprised 20 cuts of chicken, all priced per 2-inch skewer. I enjoyed the momo negima ($6), thigh meat and Japanese scallion brushed with a reduction of soy, sugar, sake and house-made broth, one of the few chicken dishes that had a seasoning other than salt (albeit premium French sea salt). I also liked the bonjiri ($6), three fatty boned tails that took particularly well to a charcoal-roasting. The chefs kept their eyes constantly trained on their robata workstations, frequently turning bamboo skewers, adjusting the long rectangular grates, shuffling meats and vegetables from high- to low-heated zones, then back. Their choreography delivered consistent, perfectly cooked results timed to arrive hot, with white meat as juicy as the dark. At the end of the day, however, it was still grilled chicken. There was no epiphany, no transformative moment that crowned the humble hen as the next Kobe cow.

More creative were the non-poultry dishes, which didn't have to shoulder a purist's version of this genre of Japanese cooking. The kalbi ($8) came as three amazingly tender mahogany cubes of short rib brushed with a caramelized-soy glaze and dressed with slices of carrots and microgreens. The bacon-wrapped enoki ($7) were a heavenly combination of pork belly and a quarter-sized grouping of enoki, the fattiness of the cured meat complementing the juiciness of the mushrooms. A must-order dish was the whole squid ($17), which arrived splayed like a purple-and-white orchid. The flavor was delicate and ethereal, especially when dipped in the accompanying mayonnaise with hot spices. Another excellent selection was the umami-rich hotate hamayaki ($9), or large local scallop, grilled in its shell and dressed in butter and soy sauce with a slice of lemon on top. After the meager portions of poultry, the sizing of the seafood options was a welcome relief. Unfortunately, the hokke mackerel ($15), while filling, lacked flavor and could've benefited from a sauce or seasoning.

B.N.'s Picks

Karaage

Non-yakitori items on the menu, from "the small fares" and "rice and noodles" sections, can supplement your meal with a dose of carbs. The karaage ($12), served with grated daikon and ponzu, plated delicious chunks of fried chicken coated with flour and Japanese sticky rice for a substantial crunch. The yaki onigiri ($4), or rice ball, was simple but addictive, with a bowl's worth of compressed rice grilled until crispy over binchotan and served with soy sauce.

Yakitori Zai exudes elegant simplicity. Its mustard walls, burnished wood and small patio help it cast a welcoming vibe on a mostly residential stretch of Shawmut Avenue. But despite its cozy neighborhood feel, it's best to treat Yakitori Zai as a stop along the way to dinner, a place to get a drink of sake ($15-$48, 300 ml bottle), a couple of bites, then elsewhere for a more substantial meal. As it is now, portions are too skimpy and prices too high to elevate it from a novelty spot. ✖✖✖

Q: MY LIPS ARE ON THE THIN SIDE, AND I AM CONSIDERING "FILLING" THEM BUT I'M AFRAID OF LOOKING LIKE A FREAK; I WANT TO LOOK NATURAL.

A: We all see pictures of celebrities with oversized lips thanks to an over-zealous physician, or we have seen our friends go for a little "pouf" and, well, you know...

In the hands of an experienced physician or injector, your lips will look totally natural and the only person who will know you have had filler is you! (Unless you tell them.)

There is one vital key to natural looking lips: selecting the right physician or injector. The physicians and nurses at SkinHealth take a conservative approach and understand that less is more. You want an experienced injector who also knows how to select the correct filler product to use that will leave your lips soft, pliable, and natural-looking.

One more thing: it sounds like it would be painful to have an injection in your lips, but thanks to the addition of lidocaine to numb the area, it actually is not! Don't be afraid to give it a try: the key is a conservative approach. The results can be stunning!

CULT FOLLOWING

With an all-star cast, The Master has no trouble gathering devotees.

The Master ★★★★
Starring Joaquin Phoenix, Philip Seymour Hoffman, Amy Adams, Jesse Plemons and Laura Dern. Written and directed by Paul Thomas Anderson. At Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.

ELUSIVE, IMPECCABLY controlled and, at times, alienating, Paul Thomas Anderson's The Master is a bold and weighty picture. I daresay it's possible to be wowed by the film without quite grasping it, rather turning over the cryptic double meanings and curveball non sequiturs in your mind for days after the closing credits roll. There's already a fervent cult of P.T. Anderson worshippers insisting that unless you've seen it twice, you haven't seen it at all.

I've only seen it once, so take this however you will.

Since the movie revolves around a cult, it's fitting that the film should inspire such fanatical devotion. Philip Seymour Hoffman costars as Lancaster Dodd, the sly, silky-voiced leader of a movement called "the Cause," which, depending on who's feeling litigious at the moment, may or may not be based on Scientology. There are dozens of parallels here to L. Ron Hubbard and Dianetics, but I doubt Anderson is particularly interested in them all that much. Leave the exposés to Vanity Fair and Tom Cruise's attorneys; this is a movie about characters.

Finally returning to the screen after a bizarre, years-long public performance art stunt, Joaquin Phoenix costars as Freddie Quell. Fresh out of the Navy during America's heady, post-WWII flush, he's a sex-obsessed, unrepentant drunk. A chronic masturbator fashioning Kitty Dukakis cocktails out of torpedo fuel and photochemical developing fluids, Quell is slightly deranged and probably mentally handicapped. First seen dry humping a sandcastle, Phoenix has a bent posture and gnarls his face into contorted sneers. Hands held high on his hips, farting loudly and seeing every Rorschach inkblot as pornography, he's a man reduced to pure animal impulse. (I gasped aloud when, while primping for a party, Quell nonchalantly chugs a bottle of Lysol from the medicine cabinet.)

What Dodd sees in Quell is the crux of The Master. Here is a love story between the id and the superego, except the superego might be full of crap. Dodd espouses convoluted philosophies about past lives and hidden traumas, complete with sense-memory repetition exercises he calls "processing" that bear a startling similarity to those in a freshman-year method-acting class. It's the 1950s, and a charlatan-like Dodd is riding high on contributions from suddenly wealthy, bored housewives. But in Quell he has found the ultimate test case for his manifestos.

The title cuts several ways, and it's telling that I don't recall us hearing Dodd's name until an hour or so into the picture. He just prefers to be called "Master." In one sense, Quell is his pet, with Dodd teaching this rabid old dog new tricks, always followed by an awesomely condescending, "Good boy."

But Dodd's also making all this up as he goes along. As the Cause catches on across the East Coast, devotees begin to notice cracks in the dogma, which are often petulantly dismissed by their author. Hoffman was a brilliant choice for the role. He summons grandiose elegance when speaking publicly, and yet always carries with him a faint air of flop sweat. Dodd's waiting to be found out as a fraud, and we see that part of him that secretly just wants to get loaded with Freddie and break wind.

None of this escapes Dodd's wife, Peggy, played with dead-eyed rigor by Amy Adams. If not the brains of the Cause's operation, she's definitely the backbone, and she has no patience for her husband's peculiar dalliance with this miscreant. It's an act of amazing, counter-intuitive casting, with Adams' Kewpie-doll cuteness undercut by scary, steely resolve. Peggy lays things out for Dodd during what might be the most terrifying hand-job in cinema history.

The tricky thing about The Master is that some of Dodd's sham methods actually seem to work, providing a focus and purpose for Quell. He'd probably be dead in a ditch somewhere, otherwise.

Shooting on obsolete large-format film, Anderson eschews vistas, constricts the frame and relishes the enhanced resolution's capacity for minute detail. The movie is mostly close-ups with an extremely shallow depth of field, making every twitch and blink seismically resonate. (Depressingly, The Master screened for critics on the AMC Boston Common's rinky-dink digital system, but you can watch it in full 70mm glory at the Coolidge Corner Theatre, one of only a handful of cinemas in the country to reinstall old projectors, so their patrons can see this film as it was intended to be shown.)

The Master is confounding and troubling. The over-emotive flourishes of Anderson's Boogie Nights and Magnolia are missing here. Much like his There Will Be Blood, this one feels like it was edited with a scalpel and might've landed here from another planet, with an atonal Jonny Greenwood score adding to the unease. This is an ambivalent picture, one that remains stubbornly unresolved. It's a singular vision, and the movie haunts. ✖✖✖

SOUND CORRAL

Michael Gira refines and expands his band's orchestral din.

Swans
play the Paradise Rock Club on Oct. 11.

IF NOT FOR MUSIC, Michael Gira predicts he'd still be a construction worker. It was his day job during the early '80s, when he trashed and renovated New York lofts and apartments. At the end of 10 hours' labor, however, Gira pursued another form of release with his band, Swans, pounding with guitars instead of hammers.

"I'm hanging Sheetrock still, just with sound," says Gira, who revived Swans in 2010 after a 13-year hiatus. In the process he's refined elements of both the band's brutal early work and its atmospheric later permutations.

"The first seven years of Swans were pretty much watching the room empty as we played," Gira recalls. The band emerged in the wake of New York's No Wave scene, sharing roots with Sonic Youth in the loud, minimalism-inspired guitar orchestras of Glenn Branca, though also reflecting the primal repetition of the blues.

"It was an extreme experience that I had to have, and I inflicted it on the audience," Gira says of that confrontational period. "These days, it's a little more inclusive. I look at [the music] as an instigator of joy, whereas I don't think I would've ever used that word in those days."

"The first seven years were pretty much watching the room empty as we played."

It's a sound both matured and expanded on Swans' new two-disc album, The Seer, which patiently develops riffs and rhythms into cyclical crescendos that can prove incessant and unsettling, as the band strives for something like a Sufi state of ecstasy.

"There are lots of nuances within the basic chord," says Gira, now 58. "It's just an open swirl that you can lose yourself in. That's what I gravitated toward, from growing up in the '60s, listening to psychedelic music. It's just looking for the peak experience inside the sound. But it's not that highfalutin. The Stooges did the same thing in a [proto-punk] way."

Swans incubated songs for The Seer onstage during their last tour and continued to build on them in the studio. The title track and "The Apostate" run 32 and 23 minutes respectively and have stretched longer on a tour that hits the Paradise on Oct. 11.

"It's very structured, but there's lots of room within the sections to move around," Gira says. "I just let the thing grow and corral it into shape. The music sort of dictates where things go. I'm not a composer, so I kind of respond to what's happening at the moment, sort of like a film director, like Cassavetes."

Gira says he's been trying to make records that work like soundtracks since the late '80s. "In that instance, you'd need poignant, quiet moments as well as the more eruptive or apocalyptic things," he says. To that end, The Seer features a broader palette than 2010's largely austere My Father Will Guide Me Up a Rope to the Sky, including strings as well as backup vocals from Akron/Family (the psych-rock combo that Gira launched on his Young Gods label), Alan Sparhawk and Mimi Parker from indie-rockers Low, and Gira's ex-wife and onetime Swans mate, Jarboe.

On this album, however, the female presence centers on an aching lead vocal from Yeah Yeah Yeahs frontwoman Karen O on "Song for a Warrior," which shines as a stark, acoustic changeup. "I felt like some cranky old man trying to sing this beautiful lullaby," Gira says. "I'm a producer as well as a singer, so I try to remain objective. Where my voice isn't working, I try to get someone else."

But on tour, says Gira, "I guess what we're doing is a man thing." That's the impression cast by a shaggy, oft-shirtless guy named Thor Harris banging chimes in a chiseled, stern-faced ensemble that also features lap-steel force Christoph Hahn, longtime guitarist Norman Westberg, bassist Christopher Pravdica and drummer Phil Puleo.

On tour, the band's been serving brand new pieces as well as a few tracks from The Seer, ignoring My Father Will Guide Me in favor of resurrecting "Coward," an '80s song that "doesn't sound like the recording at all." Gira dismisses nostalgia. "I'd rather die," he says of reciting old material. "It has to be something that makes me feel like I'm maximizing my potential on Earth." ×××

HELP WANTED

Self-reliance is for dummies.

AMERICA IS IN THRALL TO the cult of do-it-yourself. E-Trade tells us we can be our own financial advisors. HGTV says we can be our own contractors. Sandra Lee encourages us to create our own tablescapes, whatever those are. We have ATMs and self-checkout lines and instant Kindle downloads, so we can get our mommy porn without enduring the withering scorn of the Barnes & Noble cashier.

Well, I have this crazy new idea: talking to actual human beings and then paying them to help me. It's called DIY: Don't Irritate Yourself.

I established my new policy halfway through the assembly of an Ikea Hemnes cabinet. By the time I had the first two drawers assembled, I'd lost an hour of my life and handled 80 separate pieces. My living room looked like a disaster reconstruction scene, where investigators try to figure out how that plane full of allen bolts crashed into the mountainside. "If only there were a better way!" I thought, as I stared at the 10-pound assembly handbook, which requires that you own your own power tools and can read hieroglyphics. Well, there is a better way: Go to a furniture store and buy something that looks like furniture in the first place. Ikea is fine for simple stuff like a little Lack table or Schnognündelfessenbjorj shelf, but any item that comes in two flat-pack boxes should be avoided like the evil elves of the Sundsvall Fjord.

Perhaps building your own furniture is impractical, but scanning your own groceries should be easy enough, right? I counsel that before you step into the self-checkout line, take a look in your basket. If everything has a barcode, you're probably fine. But if you have so much as a solitary apple in there, then prepare to feel like a 19th-century frontier settler who time-traveled to the final exams of an MIT computer science class. To pay for that fruit, you'll need to know the complete taxonomy of apples, the biography of Johnny Appleseed and how to hedge futures for apple-juice concentrate on the Minneapolis Grain Exchange. If you have a more eclectic piece of produce, like scallions, you'll be in the self-checkout line for so long that you'll eventually trade those scallions for your life when the barbarian hordes overrun Stop & Shop in the Great Apocalypse of 2047.

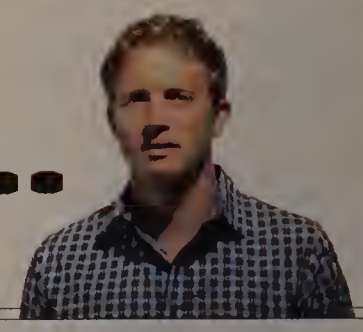
Groceries are a double-DIY trap because after you buy them you still have to assemble them into some kind of edible concoction. I know that many people enjoy cooking, but to me, the Epicurious recipe roster reads like a delivery menu requiring labor instead of sitting on my couch for 30 minutes. Nevertheless, the other night I decided to prove that I can cook, so I picked a recipe for cod with asparagus and prosciutto. Somewhere around the time I was grating lemon rind to make the sauce that would go beneath the asparagus spears (boiled for three minutes and then chilled in a bath of ice water), I started thinking about how it would've been easier and probably less expensive to just order takeout. And takeout certainly wouldn't have set off every smoke alarm in the house because parchment paper doesn't like to be baked at 500 degrees, Epicurious.

Those times I've dipped a toe in the DIY waters, I've typically been motivated by cheapness more than pride. But I've come to realize that you're often better off having a little less money in your pocket and a few more fingers on your hands. For instance, I recently parted with $200 to have professionals get rid of a tree that was leaning precariously over my house, even though I could've taken it down myself. In the best-case scenario, I would've saved $200. Worst-case, I'd be on my way to the ER with chainsaw wounds while squirrels ransacked my kitchen via the new tree-shaped hole in the roof. Money well spent, I say.

There are three other categories where I recommend delegating the job, if at all possible. Call it the Triple-M Theory: movers, mechanics and mowing (lawns). All of these services are well worth the indulgence. I've never actually hired a mover, but I imagine it's worth it just to avoid U-Haul, one of the few companies where a visit makes you wonder whether you feel worse for the employees or yourself.



If you're in prison, and you need to make some toilet wine, then by all means embrace the DIY aesthetic. For everyone else, I invite you to join my new DIY movement, aka PSETDI (Pay Someone Else to Do It). You'll help the economy, and ultimately you'll help yourself. Now let's get cooking. By which I mean ordering sushi. ✖✖✖

TAKE 5

THE END OF THE SOX... AND TAKE 5

FIVE OFFSEASON SOX STORYLINES

Is This It for Ells? Jacoby Ellsbury will be 30 when he enters free agency next fall, and that (plus his general lack of durability) makes it unlikely that Boston will fork over the big bucks. So, that's why they should trade Ells while they can. Maybe send him home to the Northwest (with a few other pieces) for the one they call King Felix? We might have to hold a massive pink hat funeral, but... wait, there's no but. That would be great!

GOING, GONE? Ellsbury's time is up.

Losing Lackey If they found someone to take Beckett and Crawford, the Sox can find a taker for John Lackey. They're so close to putting 2011 behind them, and Lackey's slothful presence is nothing but a reminder of a time we're all desperate to forget. Who cares what they get in return? I'd send him to the Dodgers for a bag of Adrian Gonzalez's goatee shavings.

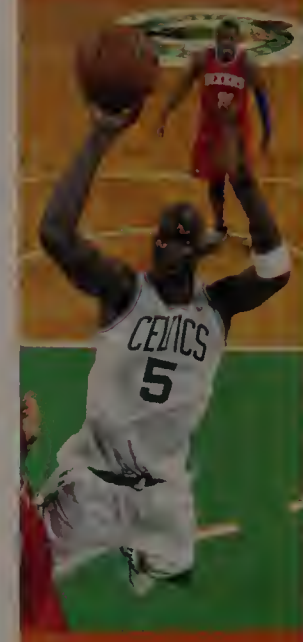
The Fate of Bobby V If Ben Cherington has his way, Bobby Valentine will be fired five seconds after the final out of Game 162. But is Larry Lucchino willing to swallow his pride and give the OK? That's the question, along with this: How's Lucchino still holding on to any pride? It should've gone out the window with the "eighth anniversary of the 2004 World Series" celebration.

Papi Wants That Paper The Sox could really use David Ortiz next season, but Ortiz still really wants a multiyear contract. Hasn't this back and forth gone on long enough? In the name of cleansing that clubhouse of all forms of aholery, you wonder if it might be time for Papi to move on. He'll always be a hero, but right now, he's also a massive Davey Downer.

Searching for Sabermetrics The 2012 Sox drew fewer walks than any Boston team since 1931, and their combined OBP is the franchise's lowest since 1972. What the hell happened to Moneyball? The Sox need to reprogram Carmine, get Bill James on a steady diet of Adderall and get back in touch with their championship roots. And for good measure: How about the owners just sell the team?

3 Patriots Parallels

Busted Coverage Speaking of Ty Law, his was a name that we all threw around after Devin McCourty's rookie season. We thought McCourty was the heir apparent, the foundation for the next generation of the Patriots secondary. Instead, McCourty's proven to be more Chris Canty than Ty Law. At this point, we'd even settle for Ellis Hobbs. (Also, just for fun, I'd like to say: "Earthwind Moreland.")



Receiving Resemblance The initial word on Brandon Lloyd was that he was the Pats' best deep threat since Randy Moss. But when I look at Lloyd, I don't see Moss. I see Terry Glenn—the good Terry Glenn. Graceful, athletic and acrobatic, with hands stickier than a barroom floor. Although, I'm not sure if Lloyd's as willing to answer to "she."

Mr. Jones You know I can't go an entire issue without flying off the handle over Chandler Jones, so here's this week's installment: Jones is the second coming of Willie McGinest. (Which I guess makes Dont'a Hightower "Chris Slade," Sterling Moore "Scooter McGruder" and me "still an idiot.")

ONE FINAL WORD

I've written this column for more than five years, and over that time, I've filed at least 35,000 *Take 5*s (I think). But it's with a heavy heart and an extreme case of carpal tunnel that I inform you that this is the last one. Just want to say thank you to everyone at the Improper for a great run, and obviously, a special thanks to all the readers. It's been a blast.

2 EARLY SEASON C'S

SHOW ME THE LIRA As I mentioned earlier, the Celtics will spend training camp traveling through Istanbul and Milan. It should be great for chemistry and an amazing team-building exercise. And best of all, if things don't work out with Darko, they can always just leave him at customs.

WORRIED ABOUT AVERY There are a lot of positive vibes surrounding the C's, but the Avery Bradley situation is one area of concern. Initially, they said he'd be back in September. Then it was December. Now, we might be looking at January! Who knew that dislocating your shoulder 17 times in two weeks could have such ramifications?

4 DATES TO WATCH

10/3: The Sox are in the Bronx, as their season finally meets its bitter end. (However, expect Fenway to keep racking up sellouts for at least another few weeks.)

10/5: The Celtics kick off Training Camp in Istanbul. Let's pray that they escape without KG inciting an international incident.

10/7: For the first time in nearly two years, Peyton Manning pays a visit to Gillette, where even money says he'll still find a way to throw an interception to Ty Law.

10/16: Still no hockey.

Soroff On MICHAEL BASTIAN

The designer talks color combos, underwear licensing and one-night stands.

ICONIC FASHION DESIGNER MICHAEL BASTIAN, 47, WAS BORN IN Lyons, N.Y., and graduated from Babson College in Wellesley. After working at Abraham & Strauss, Sotheby's, Tiffany & Co., Polo Ralph Lauren and Bergdorf Goodman (where he was the men's fashion director for five years), he launched his own menswear line, Michael Bastian, in 2006. The Council of Fashion Designers of America named him Menswear Designer of the Year in 2011, the fourth time he was nominated for the prize. In 2010, he launched a menswear collaboration with Gant, called Gant by Michael Bastian, which is distributed in more than 60 countries and is carried in both Gant stores and independent retailers. The newest boutique opened on Newbury Street in September. He lives in New York.

Jonathan Soroff: So what are you wearing right now?
Michael Bastian: Shorts, a T-shirt and a half-zipped sweatshirt.

What would you like to design the most?
Bathing suits. The less you're wearing, the more precise it needs to be.

Hardest item to design?
Jeans are really tough. There are so many moving parts to getting a perfect jean. Everybody's got a different body, first of all, so designing something for the vast majority is a tall order. Then once you've got the fit, you've got the details: the thread color, the denim, the wash. It's one of those things that everyone wears, but it's probably the most difficult to design.

Fashion trend you're sick to death of?
A better question is the trend that designers are trying to bring back and I'm worried will take off, and that's those big huge shoulders. Some designers are playing around with that look, and I've always hated it. It makes everyone look like they've got a pinball head.

One thing you'd never be caught dead wearing?
That's a hard question because every time I express an opinion on what a guy should never wear, I walk out my front door and see someone wearing it and rocking it to perfection.

Fill in this blank: ____ is the new black.
Navy.

Who's the designer you admire most?
Perry Ellis when he was alive.

Favorite fashion magazine?
I really love American GQ.

Is there a celebrity you'd love to dress?
John Hamm can do no wrong. I've met him, and he's just a great guy. He's exactly what you'd expect: cool, approachable, funny, friendly.

Three things every man should have in his wardrobe?
A good navy blazer. A good pink oxford-cloth shirt for when you're hungover or feeling a little under the weather. And I think every guy should have a pair of beige five-pocket corduroys. I wear them all the time instead of jeans. I think they're a little bit cooler.

One thing most men get wrong?
Shoes! You know, it seems like an easy thing, but shoes can mess up your look faster than anything. Especially cheap shoes. Guys need to approach shoe shopping the way they approach car shopping. They've got to spend the money and keep them in good repair. Sink your money into a good pair of shoes, and look after them.

What do you look for in a model?
It's different for the MB show and for the Gant presentation. For MB, we need a guy with a really strong presence, looks like he should be in the clothes, has a really good walk. For Gant, they need a lot of personality because they don't just walk a runway. They interact with the crowd and each other. They dance. They talk. They're like wonderful guests at a great party.

Favorite department store or place to shop?
In the world? This amazing store in Tokyo called United Arrows. It's so beautiful, from the architecture to the merchandise. The top floor has a custom kimono shop that also does men's formalwear. They have beautiful music, beautiful furniture. I've never seen anything like it in the world.

Favorite color combo?
Gray and navy.

Do you think clothes make the man?
Not at all. I'm the first one to say that you should see the guy first, then maybe notice the clothes. With clothes, their only job is to make you feel good about yourself.

Ever dated a model?
Hmm... Does a one-night stand count? [Laughs.] I guess the answer's yes.

When will you design underwear?
I'm dying to do underwear. When you're talking about a men's brand, to get really big you have to take a different route from women's. With women's, the trick is to get a really hot, successful handbag. That can double your business quickly. With men's, there are a couple of ways: fragrance, an underwear license, shoes.

Boxers or briefs?
Briefs.

When was the moment you realized you'd made it in the fashion world?
I'm still waiting for that moment. I wake up every day with a fire in my belly, pushing me forward.

Are you your own best advertising?
I'm pretty sloppy. If I like what I'm wearing, I can wear it two or three days in a row, which is kind of gross. I think I'm so absorbed with clothes that the less I have to think about them in my own life, I jump at the opportunity.

Anyone you'd love to dress for the Oscars?
I'd love it if someone I thought was really smart, like Daniel Day-Lewis, picked my clothes. It's an honor to have celebrities wear your stuff, but when it's somebody you really respect, that makes it that much better. ×××

A LIGHTER FOOTPRINT DOWN THE AISLE

how to plan a greener wedding

BY LINDSAY TUCKER

ILLUSTRATIONS BY ELIZABETH BADDELEY

GOING GREEN IS NOW the norm. Whether you eat organic, compost at home or use Hubway, you're most likely pitching in to some degree. And New England's a hub for environmentally conscious purveyors (think solar panels at Gillette Stadium, sustainable farming and freight farms). When it comes to weddings, most brides have been dreaming up the details since long before he or she popped the question—but they probably haven't stopped to consider just how much trash is produced by a single shindig. There are the invites, the food, the wrapping paper, place settings, tablecloths, favors, programs, flowers. According to the Green Bride Guide, a wedding in the United States, on average, produces 62 tons of carbon dioxide and 400 to 600 pounds of garbage. Multiply that by 2.5 million annually and it's enough to give even the most eco-friendly bride cold feet. Fortunately, there are some simple ways to offset your waste production, whether you decide to go all in or just incorporate a few green aspects into your "I do." Here are some ways you can dramatically reduce your environmental impact.

Green Paper Trail

As stated by Kate L. Harrison, author of The Green Bride Guide: How to Plan an Earth-Friendly Wedding on Any Budget, the amount of paper used for wedding invitations each year could cover the entire island of Manhattan. And paper isn't reserved solely for the invitations—let's not forget save-the-dates, RSVP cards, programs, menus, place cards, thank-yous and other details. While there are downsides to sending evites (namely, it's tacky, and your grandmother will hate it), sending an e-save–the-date to casual friends is an option. A more creative idea is to commission a bakery to make edible save-the-dates or place cards out of cookies or tarts. Cakes for Occasions in Danvers comes up with adorable and elegant treats of this ilk. But if you're going traditional, fret not. "It's easier than you think to find vendors who already have eco-practices in place," says Stasia Neff-Maley, who married her wife, Carrie, in Cape Cod in 2011. "Our wedding stationery came from a small, woman-owned business. She [Jessica Tulaloo] prints on paper with a 30 percent recycled content from mills that are 100 percent carbon-neutral and that run on 100 percent wind energy." Up the ante and surprise friends and loved ones by having paper goods printed on plantable wildflower paper from Creative Papers, Ltd. in Shrewsbury. Owners Judy and Nancy Whalen offer handmade, seeded invites, reply cards and thank-yous (with options like feathered edges and adorned silk ribbon details) out of their home studio.

To the Source

Showcase what New England has to offer (and support your local economy) by serving in-season, regional cuisine. Choose a caterer who's committed to green practices and hire Bootstrap Compost to come pick up the leftovers, or donate them to a shelter. Chive Sustainable Event Design and Catering in Beverly will source each ingredient on your menu to guarantee that they're cultivated safely. "We meticulously research our sources to ensure we know where our food comes from and how it is raised," Chive boasts on its website. And it makes certain farmers are fairly compensated, too. (Bonus: Chive also does event planning.)

The same rules apply for bouquets, centerpieces and boutonnieres. Most cut flowers are riddled with pesticides and GMOs, and are imported from countries like Colombia, Ecuador and Holland—a long way to travel for such a short shelf life. Wedding designer and stylist Desiree Spinner swears by Petalena Flowers in Arlington, who made arrangements for the Neff-Maleys' wedding. "We tell clients to work with florists who use local resources," she says. "Whatever they use for the ceremony, the florist can come in and repurpose for the reception, or even a brunch sendoff."

Yes to the Eco Dress

Wearing a used dress is more chic than it sounds. Wedding planner Bernadette Smith of 14 Stories fondly recalls how a recent client had her mother's wedding gown altered and redesigned for her own walk down the aisle, giving it more sentimental value than something plucked from a rack. The Neff-Maleys bought their dresses from the Brides Against Breast Cancer traveling trunk show, a charity that collects gowns for resale (most are between $100 to $800). Proceeds help benefit cancer patients and their families.

Location, Location, Location

Spinner encourages couples to use preservations, art galleries or museums for the rehearsal dinner. "This way the money goes back into the community," she says. Furthermore, landscaped areas like vineyards, orchards, botanical garden, and arboretums offer natural beauty with fewer logistical issues, Harrison points out. "Vineyards, for example, often have wedding packages with local wine, good food and a beautiful vista included," she says. There are more than 100 reservations in Massachusetts, such as the Crane Estate in Ipswich or the Eleanor Cabot Bradley Estate in Canton, with historic mansions, lush gardens or wildlife sanctuaries on the property. In Boston, green spaces like the ICA and the Artists for Humanity EpiCenter use wedding proceeds to give back to their arts or youth programs.

Of course Spinner suggests having out-of-town guests stay in a green hotel (try Boston's Nine Zero and the Eliot; both have been recognized for their environmentally friendly initiatives like electricity and water conservation and rigorous recycling programs), or you could cut hotel waste altogether by inviting them to camp out. California-based Shelter Co. pop-up camping service "will come right out to the property and set up these luxury tents that are amazing," says Spinner. "The insides are like homes. They have beds, floors and carpets. It's really cool and a great alternative to staying in a hotel."

In the Details

The Neff-Maleys rented vintage items like dainty mismatched tea cups and vases from New England Vintage Rentals and Mad Props in Boston, trying not to buy anything online to avoid unnecessary shipping. "Looking around during our reception at some of the different environmentally-conscious details—the repurposed vintage cheese boxes and bottles holding flowers on the tables, the locally catered food and the table numbers printed on recycled cardstock—made us feel deeply fulfilled as a newly married couple," says Carrie. "What a wonderful way to start a new

"I went to quite a few laser places before I decided to go to Laser Gentle, and I have to say I couldn't be happier. The staff was very friendly and unlike everywhere else they seemed more concerned with my needs rather than making a sale off of me. I've had three laser treatments on my underarms so far and have seen a huge improvement already! The only bad part is now I'm addicted." - JEN TAYLOR life together, having resisted the popular choices of a conventional wedding to minimize our impact on the environment and positively influence the future attitudes and decisions of our friends and family." When it comes to the details, no green choice is too small. Skip buying a guest book and instead use an old picture book, or, as Harrison suggests, create compostable decor like a watermelon keg or a hollowed-out pumpkin depending on the season. "We took advantage of New England's vast array of vintage and antique stores in order to find a lot of our repurposed decor," Carrie adds. "Our plan is to eventually sell these items back to the stores so they can be used again and again."

Give it Up

Rather than spending money on tossable trinkets as party favors, make a small donation for each guest to a charity that resonates with you and your spouse. For example, you can calculate the estimated carbon footprint of your wedding using Terrapass.com. Just enter a rough headcount and anticipated travel plans. Nonprofits like the Boston Tree Party and Carbon Fund will gladly accept donations to offset the damage.

Gifts for the bridal party and groomsmen can also be purchased from Ten Thousand Villages (in Downtown Crossing, Brookline and Cambridge). Everything from jewelry to bookends to cinnamon-spice soaps are handcrafted by disadvantaged artisans across the globe, and profits go directly back to help them pay for food, education, health care and housing.

A Little Help

Lastly, it's really important to have a planner—or friend—on board with your mission for fewer greenhouse-gas emissions. When your day finally arrives, you and your partner will be too busy to worry about whether or not the caterer remembered to save the leftover food for compost. Chive, Desiree Spinner Events and 14 Stories are just a few of the area's planners with experience in green nuptials. ✖✖✖

RINGS OF TRUTH

Conflict-free jewelry options

Your rings should be a symbol of eternal love. Sadly, despite growing concerns surrounding conflict or "blood" diamonds, there isn't yet a dependable system for regulating the sale of gemstones that fuel war and crimes against humanity. Labels like "Canadian diamonds" and "conflict free" may imply a guilt-free purchase, but none of them really disclose the degree to which the materials were ethically sourced.

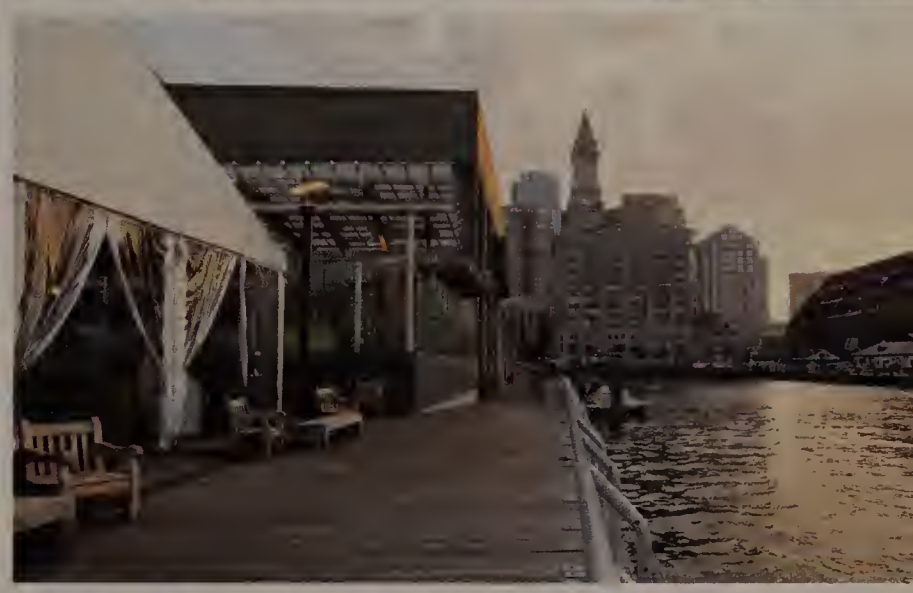
Here's a cheat sheet to help break down labels, digest options and find an ideal fit.

− The Kimberley Process Certification Scheme was created in 2003 to attempt to regulate conflict-diamonds from entering the market, but it's since been deemed a failure by international NGO Global Witness and other human rights advocates. Numerous reports have surfaced of more than $200 million worth of "certified" diamonds originating from Zimbabwe's Marange fields—notorious for human rights abuses.

− Canadian diamonds are marketed as a safe alternative to blood diamonds, but don't be fooled. Mining of these stones has severely negative effects on the environment, stifling the ecosystem and disrupting the lives of aboriginal peoples who've called the land home for centuries.

+ Synthetic diamonds—also called HPHT or CVD diamonds—have gained popularity (Angelina Jolie claims to only wear synthetic diamonds) because they're made in a lab, sans war crimes. They're physically and chemically identical to mined diamonds. (Check out brilliantearth.com/rings/lab-created-diamond-rings.)

+ Antique stones and settings, though likely mined inappropriately at some point in time, decrease the demand for further mining. Plus, the historical aspect is a bonus. (Check out Brodney Antiques & Jewelry, 145 Newbury St., Boston, 617-536-0500, brodney.com.)



+ Gemstones can be especially unique and striking—you'll get more bang for your buck, and bold colors always turn heads. (Check out Boston Ring and Gem, 333 Washington St., 2nd Floor, 617-720-2724, bostonringandgem.com.)

+ Moissanite sparkles with the same brilliance of a diamond, is arguably just as durable, but is composed of carbon and silicone in a lab. And it's easier on the bank account—save your pennies for a down payment on a condo instead of a finger ornament. (Check out Landau Jewelry, Copley Place, 617-266-8777, landaujewelry.com.)

PLACE SETTINGS

Five ideal wedding venues through the lenses of five local photographers

ROGER WILLIAMS PARK BOTANICAL CENTER

1000 Elmwood Ave., Providence, R.I. (401-785 9450, ext. 240)

New England's largest indoor horticultural marvel, this collection of 12,000 square feet of roofed gardens is, simply put, breathtaking. Two greenhouses—the Conservatory and the Mediterranean Room—are equally impressive, and the outdoor garden displays include a perennial garden, pine and hosta dell, winter garden, wooded hillside terrace, overlook garden and a stunning rose maze. Whether you want to tie the knot among knotty pines or lush palm trees, the center has the ideal spot. And just think what you can save on flowers. Shot by Rebecca Hansen

OLD STURBRIDGE VILLAGE

1 Old Sturbridge Village Road, Sturbridge (508-347-0306)

For quintessential old–New England charm, you can't compete with this venue. Ceremonies can be held at the Center Meetinghouse with its antique organ and candle chandelier or in the herb garden. The backdrop options for photos are dizzying, with more than 200 acres encompassing scores of 19th-century buildings, gardens, gazebos, fireplaces, etc. Add touches like the opportunity to exchange vows in specially fitted period garb and touring the Village Common in a horse-drawn carriage, and the word "quaint" doesn't even begin to describe it.

Shot by Avenna Studios

SACCO'S BOWL HAVEN

45 Day St., Somerville
(617-776-0552)

For quirky couples hoping to avoid stiffness and formality, this Somerville gem is a primo place to get hitched. The funky, colorful interior has large communal tables and plenty of room to let loose, in addition to excellent flatbread pizzas, while the bowling lanes offer guests something to do other than watch the happy couple canoodle. Perfect for bohemians and hipsters, the philosophy here is that if you're going to ask your groomsmen to don rented formalwear, they might as well wear rented bowling shoes, too.

WINGS NECK LIGHTHOUSE

Pocasset (617-899-5063) admin@wingsnecklighthouse.org

For intimate weddings (40 people or less), you can't go wrong with the lawn or beach outside this 1849 lighthouse. Located at the tip of a peninsula jutting into Buzzard's Bay, it's oriented toward the west, which means spectacular sunsets over the water. The house has accommodations for eight, and the property is so secluded, you're guaranteed no rubbernecking spectators to ruin the intimacy of the ceremony. The towns of Falmouth and Bourne have ample hotels and inns for overflow guests, and best of all, when the big day's over, you don't have to go any farther for a spectacular honeymoon destination. Shot by JHui Photography/jhuiphoto.com

ARTISTS FOR HUMANITY EPICENTER

afhboston.org/epicenter_rentalinfo.php

For an urban, edgy venue, this loft-like South Boston space boasts lots of advantages. The raw design can be transformed into whatever vision the bride and groom desire. However, the built-in design elements—like recycled Crown Vic windshields enclosing the mezzanine and a grassy outdoor patio— are always stylish (and check out the très chic bathrooms). But this place earns bonus points on two fronts: 1) It's Boston's only LEED platinum building, the highest designation of the U.S. Green Council, so it's environmentally responsible. 2) The rental cost supports the organization's mission—to bridge economic, social and racial divides by providing underserved youth with paid employment in the arts. Check with your accountant, but your wedding venue could be a tax write-off, or at the very least, a mitzvah.

MOTION PICTURES

BIKE ENTHUSIASTS AND reformed road-ragers celebrate cycling culture with the eighth annual Boston Bike Film Festival.

Benefiting MassBike and Bikes Not Bombs, the festival begins with a 7.7-mile ride from downtown Boston to Arlington's Regent Theatre, where comedic shorts and documentaries about life on two wheels hit the big screen. Included in the lineup is a three-minute French-Canadian film about a man who spends 382 days mounted on his bike. He showers, fries his eggs and lives his life, all while peddling hands-free through Montreal. (He keeps his toilet paper on the handle bar.) Enjoy quirky flicks, as well as good eats from Redbones and a silent auction, when the festival rolls through on Oct. 12.

All the World's a Stage

The Great Dane Murder, revenge and the odd dash of humor take center stage in an adaptation of Hamlet. Players from Shakespeare's Globe Theatre in London recreate the Bard's tragedy about a young prince who seeks to avenge his father's death, and who soliloquizes a whole lot along the way to Act V's bloody denouement. In this lively version, the Prince of Denmark is reinterpreted as a more youthful and less jaded teenager than is customary, and the staging employs music and actors undertaking multiple roles. See this fresh take on the foundation of high school English classes at Paramount Center Mainstage from Oct. 9–21.

Out of Gas

Shifting Gears As of late, Detroit has been considered a microcosm of our failing economy: an example of opportunity turned to desolation. Detropia, a documentary from filmmakers Heidi Ewing and Rachel Grady, chronicles the seemingly never-ending misfortunes of the Motor City—particularly its disappearing working class. Recounting Detroit's downward spiral with sensitivity, lyricism and insider knowledge, the film juxtaposes images of urban ruin with community meetings full of residents banding together to fight for a better future. It's a story that focuses as much on what can be done as on what's gone wrong. See Detropia at UMass Boston on Oct. 4.

The Amazing Spider-Man ★ ½ It's déjà vu all over again in this lazy, rote retelling of the web slinger's origin story, rebooted a mere 10 years since Sam Raimi's effervescent adaptation just for the sole purpose of allowing Sony to keep the movie rights. That's correct, it's a film that exists only as contract extension, and this two-and-a-half hour slog feels as inspired as that sounds. The Social Network's Andrew Garfield pouts and poses, as the title role has been recast as a somber Twilight-type haunted by his missing parents (who are teased to figure prominently in a sequel that's scheduled to hit theaters in 2014). That's the rub with modern franchise filmmaking: Everybody's too busy planning for subsequent installments that they forget to tell a coherent story in the first. Director Marc Webb, who debuted with (500) Days of Summer, has no sense of pacing or visual bravado, and the movie often grinds to a halt on curiously empty NYC streets. (In the suburbs.)

Arbitrage ★★ With the possible exception of Michael Douglas, is there anybody better at playing wealthy scumbags than Richard Gere? The star's '80s swagger has receded into a fascinating, recessive, silver-maned emptiness. Gere has gotten a second wind by starring as morally bankrupt characters, and he glides through Nicholas Jarecki's otherwise unexceptional Arbitrage with grace under pressure. There's a matter of a missing $400 million, which Gere's character hides from his accountant daughter (a robotic Brit Marling) while in the midst of negotiating a massive merger. The high-stakes, financial flimflams would be enough to sustain a more interesting movie, but unfortunately writer/director Jarecki has a weakness for 1940s melodrama, and Arbitrage's Wall Street shenanigans take a backseat to silly developments. Jarecki tries to vamp up the vintage plot turns with something close to outrage, as if he's shocked that there'd be anything untoward going on in the modern stock market. There's a retro-kitsch factor, including a couple of boldly drawn baddies, but the moldy developments collide with a more cheerfully corrupt 21st-century thriller. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, West Newton Cinema and the suburbs.)

The Avengers ★★★ It was a rough takeoff. After five movies of buildup, the often crummy (see Thor, Iron Man 2, The Incredible Hulk) but occasionally wonderful (Captain America: The First Avenger) Marvel Films' strategy of building a bridge to nowhere at last pays off with a rock 'em, sock 'em, superhero spectacular, in which Earth's mightiest heroes team up to take on an alien invasion in midtown Manhattan. Playing out like a fanboy's nocturnal emission, we finally get to see what would happen if Iron Man fought Thor. But what makes the picture click is writer/director Joss Whedon's knack for snappy banter, as he supplies killer one-liners to Robert Downey Jr.'s debauched Tony Stark and plays to the fissure between Mark Ruffalo's laid-back line readings and his gigantic green alter ego. Massively scaled, coldly impersonal set pieces abound, but the character interactions zing. Whedon isn't much of an action director, but he's gifted with an overqualified cast and allows them to quip away to their hearts' content. (At Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Bachelorette ★★★ ½ This raw, hilarious, low-budget comedy is chock-full of drug use, casual sex and some inventive flights of profanity. I laughed myself sick. Adapted and directed by Leslye Headland from her stage play, Bachelorette is mostly about what happens when old friends resent each other's good fortune. High-school besties Regan (Kirsten Dunst), Katie (Isla Fisher), Gena (Lizzy Caplan) and Becky (Rebel Wilson) reunite when the latter is getting married to a millionaire. The obese, socially awkward Becky is the last of this quartet anyone would expect to live happily ever after, and don't think that's lost on the other three. Hence all the cocaine. Bachelorette is hysterical and awfully sad, somehow incorporating bulimia, abortion and overdoses into the breathlessly paced, farcical structure. It isn't Bridesmaids, it's Hurlyburly for women pushing 30. In her first stint behind the camera, Headland knows exactly when to drop the frenzy and allow an expression or two to sink in on her actresses' faces. There's some real depth going on beyond the shock value. This movie plays for keeps. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Beasts of the Southern Wild ★★★★ This Sundance sensation is one of the most poignant things I've ever seen. A portrait of a poor New Orleans community bracing for Hurricane Katrina, Beasts of the Southern Wild is so infused with fanciful flourishes that most of the time it feels like Days of Heaven by way of The Road Warrior. Young Quvenzhané Wallis stars as six-year-old Hushpuppy, who lives with her alcoholic father (Dwight Henry) in a junkyard community called the Bathtub. Director Benh Zeitlin drops us into this world with no explanation, and it may take a while to adjust to the harsh environment and oddball speech patterns. Oh, and there are also recently unfrozen, prehistoric aurochs roaming through the proceedings. It's a purposefully abstract piece, never a movie about "poverty" or "Katrina," but about something much harder to pin down. Eventually, it all comes down to Hushpuppy's indomitable spirit and a final shot that sends you soaring out of the theater. (At Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

sassin Jason Bourne home to New York City with a smashing finale to a trilogy that only got better as it went along. Five years later, for no discernible reason other than a quick buck, series screenwriter Tony Gilroy cashes in with a superfluous franchise reboot, starring Jeremy Renner because classy Matt Damon wouldn't touch this garbage with a 10-foot pole. Renner stars as a chemically enhanced soldier targeted for elimination by the same old gang of white guys in front of computer screens. The catch is, Renner needs to find some more government-issued smart pills, otherwise, this superspy becomes super dumb. Call it Code Name: Algernon. The pacing is dead, and the structure is a disaster, as the story introduces an antagonist in the final reel—during a climactic chase—that would've arrived 40 minutes into any competent movie. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Celeste and Jesse Forever ★★ ½ Considering it's one of those vanity projects in which TV actors try to break into film by making a Sundance entry about the relationships of well-off urbanites, Rashida Jones' screenwriting debut isn't half bad. Or at least it's agreeable in that mode of movies that rip off When Harry Met Sally in the way When Harry Met Sally ripped off Annie Hall. Jones stars as a high-strung PR type who recently divorced her longtime sweetheart (Andy Samberg) even though they've remained best friends, and he still bums around in the guesthouse. It's clear their chummy arrangement has kept them from moving on, at least until the plot contrives to have him deal with accidental fatherhood after a fling. The kicker is that sometimes people grow into the person you always wanted them to be after your time together is over—a melancholy conceit that this affable, sitcom-y picture doesn't quite figure out how to handle. (Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Cold Light of Day ★ ½ Shot two years ago and sitting on a shelf ever since, this is one of those lousy multinational productions usually cobbled together with the fun-money of some Israeli drycleaner who's hoping for a quick buck on the direct-to-video circuit. Of course, there are a couple of big stars in small roles to goose the proceeds. We've got Henry Cavill, who's playing Superman next year, as an awkward, recently bankrupt brat on a family vacation in Spain with his bulldog dad (Bruce Willis) and a lot of unpleasant expository dialogue. The family is taken hostage, and Willis soon exits the picture on the lookout for the nearest check-cashing office. It seems there've been some CIA shenanigans and something to do with angry Mossad agents. Mostly, this all leads to Cavill's hapless banker dude jumping off buildings, taking bullets and discovering his inner Jason Bourne, adrift in whichever foreign country gave the film's producers the most appealing tax shelter. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)
